

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE.

It has been frequently and very justly remarked, that in this age of universal inquiry and unbounded literary speculation, the various branches of philosophy and erudition have been cultivated with a diligence and success unknown to any former period. But although it would be preposterous to dispute the accuracy of an opinion already so strikingly apparent, and which is daily rendered more evident by the frequency of discovery and the rapidity of improvement in every department of science, as well as by the unexampled excellence of the works of literature, which are continually issuing from the press; yet it cannot but be allowed by every intelligent observer, that the science of heraldry has not, in the present period, been cultivated with the same degree of earnestness as might naturally have been anticipated. Amidst the teeming fecundity of the press, and the accelerated progression of knowledge, no work on the subject of armory, commensurate with this state of things, has as yet appeared. A wish to supply this hiatus, by presenting to the public a compilation on heraldry worthy of this enlightened era, has stimulated the author to engage in the present arduous undertaking.

Heraldry, however, unlike most other sciences, from its principles having been for ages irrevocably established, precludes that diversity and latitude, in which those who are characterized by inventive power or brilliancy of imagination, love to range; and, therefore, to such it can present but few attractions. Its nature is unchangeable; and all that can possibly be effected by the labourer in this field of intellectual exertion, is to collect, re-arrange, and embody in a more luminous form, the existing, but insulated materials which are found scattered throughout the pages of preceding authors.

When the endless variety which this science presents to the contemplation of the studious, is duly considered and appreciated, and its inseparable connexion with the venerable institutions and usages of our established constitution, its history and antiquities, is clearly understood, it will no longer excite astonishment, that men so eminently distinguished for their erudition and abilities, should, in all ages since the period of its origin, have devoted so much of their time and attention to its cultivation.

The primary object of the present compilation is to obviate a defect, which, in works of this description, has been the subject of long and general complaint, viz. the difficulty of obtaining precise and accurate information respecting any particular family. Individuals, it has been remarked, wishing to obtain such information, are under the necessity of consulting voluminous and expensive publications, in which, however arduous their research, they can seldom find more than obscure and inadequate descriptions, and those, in many instances, only intelligible to such as are competently versed in the technicalities of heraldry; not to mention, that in some cases, the object of their pursuit is completely defeated.

Although Edmondson's Complete Body of Heraldry, the ground-work of the present undertaking, is undoubtedly a most meritorious performance, and incomparably superior to those of his predecessors, for arms of English families, in respect of accuracy, amplitude, and particularity of detail; it is, notwithstanding, extremely defective in some very important essentials; the injudicious and perplexing intermixture of the I's and Y's, as also the U's and V's, so frequently occurring in these letters, and the arranging of such names together as happen to be similar in sound, without a due regard to their orthographical distinctions, are sources of considerable embarrassment to the inquirer. These imperfections have been remedied in this work, by a punctilious attention to the alphabetical arrangement of its contents, not only of the names of families, but also of the counties in which they reside, so that any family can be referred to with the greatest facility and certitude.

But independently of the manifest and incontestable advantages resulting from a more methodical arrangement, which the compiler flatters himself will be found to distinguish this work from all prior and contemporary productions on the science of heraldry, preceding authors of celebrity have been carefully investigated, and the available parts of their labours extracted; original manuscripts and documents connected with, or illustrative of the science, sought after and diligently consulted; as well as many personal and epistolary applications to gentlemen, either remarkable for their proficiency in this species of erudition, or for the exclusive sources of information which they possessed on the subject of armory, with the view of extending the utility of the work and rendering it as perfect as possible. To whom, for the promptitude and liberality of their communications, the author gratefully acknowledges himself under the strongest obligations; but regrets that he is unavoidably precluded, by their number, from thanking them individually.

In the Introduction is given a succinct, but comprehensive Inquiry into the Origin of Heraldry, with an Account of its Rise and Progress in England, and the various institutions connected therewith; the different Degrees of Nobility and Gentry; Rules of Precedency; Royal Arms of England, from Egbert the first Saxon king, to his present Majesty William the Fourth; Royal Arms of Emperors, Kingdoms, Sovereign and Independent States, Principalities, &c.; the several Orders of Knighthood, which have been instituted from the earliest to the present time, together with a description of their respective habits, collars, badges, mottos, &c. accompanied with engravings of their stars, badges, and collars; the Armorial Ensigns of Counties, Cities, Boroughs, Towns Corporate in England and Wales, and Royal Boroughs of Scotland; Abbeys, Monasteries, Deaneries, and Religious Houses, founded in England and Wales; Archiepiscopal and Episcopal Sees in England and Ireland, and those formerly established in Scotland; the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, with the several Colleges and Halls within the same; also Colleges and Hospitals, Inns of Court and Chancery, Societies, Bodies Corporate, and Trading Companies, established in London, Edinburgh, Bristol, Exeter, Chester, and Newcastle upon Tyne; an Essay on Funerals, &c.

In the next place is given an Alphabet of Arms, under their respective family names, either in the body of the work, or in the Appendix; and not only the whole of the peers and baronets now existing, with their christian names, their different titles, the dates of their births, the numbers and dates of succession, dates of creation, places of residence, and town houses; but also the whole of the English baronets that have been created since the first institution of that dignity, with their numbers and dates of creation; including, also, the arms of the baronets of Ireland and of Nova Scotia; a desideratum frequently attempted to be supplied, but never before accomplished. The arms of private families, from the introduction of heraldry into Britain, down to the present time; and the crests and mottos which were omitted in former works of this kind, so far as they could be obtained, have been inserted.

A complete Glossary of the terms used in heraldry, with explanatory engravings, the method of blazoning arms, together with every other information necessary to a thorough knowledge of the science, are also included in the present compilation.

The whole of the Mottos which occur in these volumes, amounting to upwards of seven thousand, with translations of the same, and annexed thereto the names of the families by whom they are borne, will be found arranged in their appropriate order; which, from the magnitude and completeness of the collection, the author flatters himself, constitutes no inconsiderable feature of the work.

A copious Appendix has been subjoined, containing the additions, corrections, and alterations, which have taken place since the former part of the work was printed, in order to bring it down to the present period. In fine, it has been the author's unceasing solicitude, not only to give every information on the subject, but so far to divest it of its complexity, as to render it intelligible to all.

Notwithstanding the great expense necessarily attending the publication of a work of such magnitude, as the one now offered to the public, with its numerous graphic accompaniments, and the incessant exertions bestowed upon it by the author during its progress through the press, he has not the temerity to think it entirely exempt from inaccuracies and omissions: such a consummation is neither to be expected nor attained: comparative superiority is all that he has attempted to achieve; and with what degree of ability and success his aim has been accomplished, it is not the province of the author, but of the public, to determine; and to their impartial decision, the BRITISH HERALD is now, with confident, but respectful deference, submitted.

THE
CONTAINING INQUIRIES INTO ITS ORIGIN, WITH AN ACCOUNT OF ITS RISE AND PROGRESS IN ENGLAND, AND OF THE VARIOUS INSTITUTIONS CONNECTED THEREWITH.

HERALDRY is not confined exclusively to the rules of coat armour, nor the honours which they specifically imply; but is also used as a characteristic for the proper arrangement and discrimination of the several degrees of rank and power, that have their basis in the feudal system. This science being particularly connected with the institutions of that system, a knowledge thereof is calculated to elucidate history, by representing to our view many of the customs peculiar to the early inhabitants of Europe. The variety of changes produced by the contingencies of time, have effected considerable alterations, with regard to the uses of heraldry.

The warlike habits of our illustrious ancestors, and the feats of prowess in which they delighted, are now become obsolete; but whilst the honours of ancestry form such proud distinguishments among mankind, the science of heraldry will ever be considered with the deepest interest. A retrospect will evidence its then extensive application, and shew the relative situation it holds with modern times.

In the earlier ages, when Europe was emerging from a state of barbarism, and a general ignorance of written language prevailed, heraldic devices were designed to record the exploits of the noble and brave. These devices embellished the shield and vestment in war, and were also introduced amidst the appurtenances of grandeur and magnificence in the intervals of peace: they enriched the most splendid apparel, and formed decorations the most estimable to the dwellings of the great. In the hall of the fortified castle were displayed pensile against the spacious walls, the shields and helmets of its warrior lord; ornamented with these honourable trophies, which addressed the imagination in the most impressive manner, they acted as a memento of past achievements, and as a powerful stimulus to a performance of the like heroic actions.

In the middle ages, the bold and romantic adventures in search of fame, with which we are amply furnished by the history of the Crusaders, added to the pomp of chivalry, then at its acme, led farther to the advancement of heraldry as a science. Devices then became more general, and were transferred to more durable materials, appropriated to use as well as ornament. Applied as monumental, and placed over the dormitories of the dead, they commemorate the honours of the deceased. Many of our venerable Gothic piles still contain these relics, which, to the scientific and cultivated mind, are pleasing reminiscences of antiquity, and illustrations of family and national history.

System, the foundation of science, gradually operating on heraldry, has caused it to attain that interesting and useful form, which at present it possesses. It is rendered classical, and almost infinitely various in its forms, by the most scientific rules, which even extend themselves to the graphic arts. These regulations are particularly calculated to point out the different ranks and degrees of society, and preserve the necessary subordination among mankind. Armorial ensigns aggrandize the bearer, represent his honours, and are important marks of family dignity. The specific distinctions which point out the common device of the collateral branches of a family, have frequently proved serviceable in tracing genealogies, ascertaining consanguinity, and evincing right of inheritance, when lineal descendants were wanting. Thus it is apparent, that heraldry, as a science, still concentrates utility and interest in the highest degree; although its ancient customs and applications differ widely from modern times.

The opinions of early historians and antiquarians, concerning the origin of heraldry, have been various. Some of the admirers of this once cultivated study, not finding indubitable proof when to date its rise, have been carried away by the power of fancy to form the most absurd conjectures; thus have originated the unfounded suppositions, that it was of divine origin, and proceeded from the laws of order which rule in heaven. With such hypothesis may also be classed the arguments of those who consider the subject in question, as immediately emanating from reason and the light of nature; and further adduce, that marks of distinction were first used by the posterity of Seth, that they might be distinguished from the descendants of Cain.

It would be uninteresting and useless to give a detail of all the statements of such writers, who, unable to establish them with certainty, founded their histories on a hypothetical basis. It will be necessary, however, to take a cursory view of the customs prevalent in the first ages, of using distinguishing symbols on standards, ensigns, shields, signets, &c. which, although not heraldic, according to the modern acceptation of the term, yet they formed a species of ancient heraldry, which eventually laid the foundation of that style of coat armour now in use, assigned to individuals by their sovereign as honourable distinctions of merit, and used by their posterity to witness their ancient and worthy descent. The apparent similarity, which exists between those different usages, has caused a variety of opinions; for, by confounding them together, several authors and men of erudition have consequently erred concerning the origin of heraldry. We shall, therefore, describe those customs of the ancients, and set them in comparison with those of a more modern date; and, from the latest and most approved disquisitions, fix the most probable epoch, whence we may trace the rise and progress of heraldry.

After separate nations began to be formed, ambition, with its concomitant, envy, soon produced contests and wars; these, no doubt, pointed out the utility of elevating conspicuous figures, as mustering points, whereby the different nations might arrange themselves under their respective leaders. The benefit which such marks would produce in the emergencies of war, would cause a repetition and improvement of them; and establish the use of military and national ensigns, standards, and banners.

What particular nation first made use of these, has not been sufficiently proved; though a general inclination is prevalent, in the researches of antiquity, in favour of the Egyptians. Diodorus Siculus confidently affirms them to be the inventors of military ensigns, and relates that the different animals that were borne as such, afterwards came to be worshipped as deities. There is no doubt that they were early used by that ingenious nation; for, in elucidation of this subject, several rabbinical writers have been quoted, who assert that the history of the Jews is a full proof that marks of distinction were used by the Egyptians previous to the departure of the Israelites from their land. They deduce their arguments principally from their lawgiver, Moses, assigning, by the divine command, to each of the twelve tribes, a particular device, whereby they might be distinguished and separated in their march through the wilderness. But with how much propriety these writers arrange these devices is a matter of much speculation. See Genesis, chap. XIX.

The divine appointment made known by Moses, that "every man of the children of Israel should pitch by his own standard, with the ensign of his father's house," has caused several of the cabalists to suppose that each separate family was at that time distinguished by a particular appropriate device depicted on a flag; but on referring to the subsequent part of the declaration made in that chapter, it may be seen that the whole of that nation was marshalled into four squadrons, consisting of three tribes each, and placed so as to surround the tabernacle; from which it may be inferred, that each squadron were commanded to follow a particular standard in their march, and each tribe to pitch their tents by their respective ensigns. But what renders the argument, that hereditary family distinctions were unknown to the Jews, more conclusive, is, that no mention is made in their history of any such tokens being used by them in after times. It has also been remarked, that devices used for similar purposes, as the seals of administration, or the arms of kings, or incorporated societies, and of cities, were in use in the remotest ages; several examples of which have been quoted from the sacred and profane writings. It is said in the book of Daniel, "the king sealed it with his own signet, and with the signet of his lords." And again, in the book of Kings, that Jezebel "wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal." Many other quotations to the same purport might be given; but it is to the other symbols of the ancients that they bear analogy, and not to modern heraldry.

As men became civilized, the innate desire for glory in the noble mind rendered the invention of personal embellishments necessary, for the sake of distinction. To the principal heroes and warriors in those days, the surface of the massive shield, and other parts of personal armour, afforded ample scope for this purpose; and we are informed that, in imitation of their national standards, they depicted particular devices thereon, to illustrate their individuality, whereby they might be known by their friends, and rendered more terrific to their enemies, in the hour of action.

It has been contended, that the origin of these devices might be traced to the Egyptian hieroglyphics, which were similarly designative; and that armorial distinctions were first used by Anubis and Macedo, sons of Osiris, under the emblems of a wolf and a dog. Here we might also notice various arguments brought forward in favour of nations springing from the Scythians, the Medes and Persians, the Assyrians, and various others; but such discussion is unnecessary, since the only resemblance which their rude devices possess to modern armorial bearings, consists in each generally indicating some memorable event, or virtuous and heroic action, arranged by no fixed rule, nor even considered as hereditary. The last proposition being conclusive, it may be opposed to the assertions of those writers who maintain that such symbols are synonymous with gentilitical devices, and have applied them to coat armour, from supposition only.

We may also refer to some of the Greek writers, who have remarked on the embellishment of the shields of their heroes. It has been inferred from Homer, that arms were used by the Grecian nation, previous to the Trojan war; but the inconsistency of these ideas is evident, having no foundation except in the exuberance of the imagination. In imitation of him, other Greek writers have employed their ideas in illustrating the shields of their gods, demigods, and heroes; many of their devices bear great semblance to modern blazon. Amongst those, the instances which the Iliad affords, and the symbols which Eschylus assigns to the warriors against Thebes, are some of the most prominent; but it must be observed, from the frequent recurrence of assigning different bearings to the same individual, that they had no idea of the rules which necessarily attach themselves to modern heraldry: it was the armour alone which was estimated among them, and to which they applied any regulations. In the Iliad may be noted, that the youth unused to arms wore no decorations until he had distinguished himself; then, and not till then, the crest and plume were added to his helmet, and his arms were enriched with the spoils of the enemy. In some of the Grecian states, the shield was dearer than life to the warrior, and its loss was deemed an indelible disgrace; but it was the shield itself, and not the device, upon which the honour of the bearer depended.

Certain customs of the Romans have apparent similarity to the use of coat armour, so that several heraldic historians have connected the origin of heraldry with that warlike nation. Their history affords sufficient evidence to conclude them to have been a people eminent for military and civil institutions. The spirit of patriotism and emulation, the desire of acquiring honours, and their pride in displaying them, were the traits which peculiarly distinguished their character. The descriptions of the paternal emblems borne by particular families, given by many of their elegant writers, have afforded subject for remark; but these casual bearings arose only from the propensity of mankind in general for embellishment, in which the Romans indulged, by various modes, to commemorate any particular action or achievement. We are informed, that, to represent the singular event of a raven lighting on the head of a Roman, whilst engaged in combat, that individual took the name of Corvinus, and bore a raven for his crest, on the helmet, which was afterwards continued by his successors. Ovid, Virgil, Seneca, and others, have many instances of the like nature, which, on an attentive perusal, will be found was intended by their bearers merely as historical notæ, and not to mark distinction, family, or dignity.

The jus imaginum, peculiar to the nobility of that nation, will be found to resemble certain rules in heraldry, more than any similar customs among the ancients: the honours of the patricians were hereditary; and, for a time, all the ennobling offices of the state were vested in them; they were privileged by the laws and constitution of the country to preserve the images or statues of their ancestors, who had held any official dignities: this custom formed the jus imaginum. The images were decorated with the robes of office that had been borne by those they represented; and were placed in cabinets, which stood in the courts, before their mansions. On all public solemnities and festivals, these were exposed to view, to display the family honours and descent; and they also served the purposes of coat armour, in the exequies of the noble defunct. When the barrier which separated the patricians and plebeians was removed, and the offices of the senate became common to the deserving, these appendages of nobility were rendered more valuable, as still preserving a degree of rank to the more ancient in family. The appellation of Novi was then given to those who rose by their own intrinsic worth to the senatorial office, which included the right to each of preserving the image of himself: this also distinguished him from the Ignobiles, or common people, who, like the lowest orders among us, possessed no right to display any gentilitical distinctions.

From the apposition of these different customs, the extent of the analogy is evident. It is the similarity that has occasioned many suggestions in learned authors, that the right of coat armour among the moderns, is the same as preserving the images and statues was among the Romans; and arose from, and superceded their jus imaginum. But, from the retrospective view of the customs of coat armour, taken in the introductory part of this inquiry, we may with safety affirm, heraldry had its origin in military discipline. The jus imaginum was a civil institution, capacitated only to do honour to such persons as had held offices of state, and was not at all connected with military honours. There were some instances of the statesman warrior decorating his statue with the spoils his valour had acquired; but such ornaments formed no part of the jus imaginum, as they might at any time be removed by order of the higher powers. Such a circumstance is mentioned by Suetonius, who says, that Caligula, being displeas'd with the grandeur of these families, commanded that the torques, the golden chain or collar, taken by Torquatus from one of the Gaulish chiefs, and the tuft of hair plucked by Cincinnatus from an enemy of the Romans, should be removed from their respective statues, and also that Magnus should be erased from Pompey's statue; but neither the mandate of the senate, nor the command of a tyrant, could subvert the right of preserving, and exposing to view, as occasion required, the images and statues of the nobles: the jus imaginum could not, therefore, serve any of the original purposes of coat armour.

The state of the Romans in later periods does not support the supposition, that armories were introduced to supply the custom described. Wealth had produced indolence and dissipation, and they were enervated by luxury; these degraded the military character so much, that no such alteration could then take place: had it been otherwise, the grandeur and magnificent shows that were so congenial to them, would have rendered those tokens of aggrandizement and family honour so common, that some fragments would have been rescued from oblivion; but there remains not a vestige whereon to found such a hypothesis.

The assertion that the barbarians who conquered Rome instituted arms, as an equivalent to the hereditary marks used by the people of that country, is incompatible with history. These brave and warlike bands detested alike the people and their manners; and, afraid of the contagious influence of the Roman example, they destroyed every thing appertaining to them, so that in a short time after their issuing out of their native forests, the laws, literature, arts, and manners of the Romans, were almost obliterated.

Thus having contrasted the customs of the ancients with the uses of modern heraldry, and shown their respective applications, the existing differences will authorise us in drawing therefrom these decisive conclusions; viz. that the origin of this science bears a more recent date; and that its commencement may be fixed in the eras subsequent to the downfall of the Roman empire.

A general and concise description of the government that succeeded, is given by Brydson, in his "View of Heraldry," in the following words: "After the dissolution of the Roman power, and amidst the confusion of the dark ages, a new principle of subordination was introduced by the Goths, and established throughout all the kingdoms that arose on the ruins of the western empire. The territory of every kingdom was formed into districts, usually known by the general name of baronies, though differing in extent, as well as in the rank and influence they communicated to those who held them. The greater barons were lords of entire provinces, where they exercised the rights and enjoyed the dignity, attached to sovereign power. Their provinces were subdivided into other fiefs, whose possessors were, by the tenure of military service, vassals of the baron, and peers of the barony; in like manner, the baron was a vassal of the king, and a peer of the kingdom. But the usage of fiefs varying in different countries, and in the same country at different periods, many other tenures sprang up, besides those immediately relative to war.

"All sovereignties, and other possessions in land, held either of kings or other lords, had the name of fiefs, or feus; and the possessors, that of vassals. This political arrangement, with its laws, customs, and manners, is termed the feudal system. It introduced a subordination, in point of rank, even among monarchs, who were recognised as independent. Supreme kings held a rank inferior to the emperor; whose dignity was, in a still greater degree, inferior to that of the Roman pontiff."

The condition of the conquerors, prior to leaving their forests, resembled a confederacy of independent warriors, more than a civil subjection. Each voluntarily attached himself to a chieftain, whose valour and military acquirements had procured him that high preferment. This connection was always maintained with the most inviolable fidelity, these people considering the performance of their oath the highest point of honour, and death more desirable than its infringement. Such being the principles by which they were governed, and the motives by which they were actuated, they chose, in this system of government, to imitate that of a military establishment, rather than copy the institutions of nations more advanced in civilization. A proper share of the conquered territory was, therefore, assigned to their prince, or generalissimo, to support the dignity of his state; the residue was distributed among the chiefs, who made another partition among the retainers. Thus was formed the system of government explained by the above quotation.

It was an early custom for the different chiefs to charge their shields with some symbolical device; and after they were settled in the ante-Roman provinces, and were, in some manner, subordinated by the above regulations, it became necessary for the great land-holder or baron, whose vassalage was extensive, to particularize himself by some mark or token, for the satisfaction of his superior, as to his attendance according to military stipulation; and also for the better regulation of his own men at arms. This induced each to elevate, as an ensign or banner, the figure which he himself bore upon his shield or helmet, and which was familiar to his followers. After the commencement and use of such insignia, they were of necessity continued, to prevent the confusion which alterations would naturally produce. It is probable, that their posterity would retain them for the same reason; and these distinctions became more and more valuable, till at length they were considered the hereditary distinctions of the family, and ancestral marks of honour. Their estimation gradually increased, by their advancement in utility: improvement consequently followed; and various of the most elevated and wisest of individuals, among whom we may number the Emperor Charlemagne, contributed, by personal assiduity, to their improvement, arrangement, and regulation.

This statement is corroborated by the writings of many learned historians and antiquarians. In Stuart's "View of Society," it is remarked, that a milder race of the ancient Germans, even in the obscurity of their woods, were famed for gallantry, and for manners singularly governed by the point of honour, and animated by the virtues of the amiable sex. To excel in the achievements of war was their chief aim; hence the invention of many insignia connected with arms, which were never bestowed but with great formality, upon the wearer, as an honourable token of valour and merit. "These," says Dr. Stuart, "were the friends of his manhood, when he rejoiced in his strength; and they attended him in his age, when he wept over his weakness. Of these, the most memorable was the shield; and it was the employment of his leisure to make it conspicuous; he was sedulous to diversify it with chosen colours; and, what is worthy of particular remark, the ornaments he bestowed, were, in time, to produce the art of blazonry, and the occupation of the herald. These chosen colours were to be wrought into representations of acts of heroism. Coats of arms portrayed upon the shield, were to distinguish from each other, warriors who were cased completely from head to foot, with their vizors down; and hence was at length reduced to regulation and system, what had begun without rule or art."

It is also remarked by Nisbet and other writers, that the rules of heraldry originated with the conquering Goths; which, in point of chronology, is supposed to correspond best with the conquest of Rome, under the Gothic chief Alaric, A. D. 410. To the above assertions, there is sufficient foundation to authorise us to add, that, although the ancient Germans, or their more modern descendants, first used armories, yet the art of blazonry, with other important improvements, were unquestionably from the French; and this may also account for the terms used in Great Britain being so frequent in that language. It has been stated, their introduction among that people was by Clovis, their king, of the Merovingian race, who overturned the empire of the Visigoths, A. D. 507; subdued other tribes of Germans; and took from those nations, among the spoils of war, several pennons, standards, and painted shields: these he caused to be imitated and used by the Franks. After this period, the improvement of heraldry was progressive, by the arrangement of the colours, the position of the animals, with which it was usual to charge the shield, and the regulation of their allegorical meanings. A greater scope for display was also afforded, by borrowing from the Gothic mythology the imaginary animals with which its fables abounded; whence originated the still prevailing custom of bearing dragons and other fictitious monsters.

Though the reigns of the race of Merovingian and Carolingian kings were favourable to the progress of heraldry, more especially, that of Charlemagne, of the last mentioned race, when the vogue for personal coats of arms and hereditary armorial distinctions was considerably increased by the splendour of his victories; yet it was during the reign of Hugh Capet, the first king of the third dynasty of French monarchs, that heraldry received its most striking advancement. The tournaments, that were then held with so much magnificence, were introductory to its more general use; and the magnificent display which the combatants were desirous of making, caused armorial devices to be used no longer as unornamented badges, but to be embellished with the greatest splendour those rude times could produce.

Before we proceed further in description, it should be noticed, that Velsar, du Chesne, Fauchet, du Tillet, Menestrier, and several other authors, have produced arguments for fixing the era of the invention of armories at some short time after the commencement of the eleventh century. To prove this, they adduce, that among the tombs of the great, erected previous to that time, there are none that have been originally decorated with heraldic emblems; that the most ancient seals, with arms on them, are those of the French King Louis the younger, whereon is engraved a fleur-de-lis; and that of Robert le Frison, Earl of Flanders, in the year 1072, on which he is represented on horseback, holding on his left arm a shield, charged with a lion; and, also, that arms could not be invented before the eleventh century, because they were originally intended to express surnames, the custom of assuming which was not practised till the close of the tenth century.

These arguments have been successfully contradicted; the opponents assigning, among other natural conclusions, that even their non-appearance on tombs before that period, may be attributed to the fashion of so decorating sepulchral monuments not being then introduced; especially, as heraldic devices were at first considered only as marks of distinction, and had no additional embellishments till the time above stated.

The statement concerning seals is also fully confuted. The learned Beckman assures us, that seals charged with regular shields of arms, were used by Pepin, Clotaire, Dagobert the second, and other French kings, in confirming their charters. The learned Sæken mentions golden seals of the French kings, and wax ones of their subjects, as early as the sixth century. The profound antiquarian Olivarius Uredius gives the icon of a seal of Arnulphus the Great, Earl of Flanders, affixed to a grant, made by him in the year 941; upon which the earl is represented, with a shield pendent on his breast by a ribbon, which passes round his neck, evidently charged with a lion rampant, although in a measure defaced by antiquity. Other reasons have also been given, which allow for the few impressions, and still fewer matrices of seals, that are to be met with, from the custom of destroying them to prevent forgeries; from the casualties of time, and various other causes. But how much soever armories may have been used in those early times, the manner of the representation on seals was such as to entirely prevent their exhibiting the arms of their owners. The position of the horsemen represented, was, generally, as if riding towards the sinister side of the seal, bearing on his left arm a shield, cast back in such a manner, that its under or concave side only was exposed to view. This fashion, which was prevalent in England and other parts, previous to the reign of Henry I. may also account for the few impressions of seals with arms on them, anterior to that time.

It is needless to offer any arguments to prove the fallacy of the assertion concerning the introduction of arms as connected with surnames, since it has already been shown that personal and hereditary coats of arms were used long before the eleventh century. Indeed it appears, that, among the pristine uses of heraldic devices, they supplied the deficiencies of family names. Before the year 1000, different appellations were assumed by the various branches of the same family. This custom was calculated to produce great confusion; which was, however, partially remedied by the rules of heraldry. This benefit arose from the hereditary arms being retained by each member of the family, notwithstanding the different names they had assumed; and the art of blazonry, introducing numerous specific differences, made them capable of ascertaining family connexions.

After the establishment of the feudal system, already specified, those institutions, which so forcibly mark that period of history, designated the "Ages of Chivalry," were produced by former habits, and the existing order of things. It is natural to suppose, that, although their mode of life would be altered by their new situation, yet many of their former sentiments would still regulate their conduct; and that the honours of war, so assiduously sought after in their forests, would be their darling aim, when there was still greater scope for displaying them. In fact, the ardent and enterprising spirit, which generally characterised the people of the northern nations, continually inspired them to deeds, whereby they might attain glory and eminence. In progress of time, there not being vacant fiefs, wherewith to reward the meritorious, or to gratify the ambitious, another order of dignity was conferred with the greatest solemnity. This was the honour of knighthood; which was the highest degree that could be obtained from warlike achievements. It is from those knights, or chevaliers, that the feudal times are styled the ages of chivalry.

According to the remarks of several writers, it appears that a species of knighthood existed with them, previous to its being substituted as a dignity of the first order. We are informed by the Roman historian Tacitus, "that the first honour conferred on the German youth, was the public investiture with the shield and javelin;" and it is also observed by Camden, "that those military youths were called, in their language, knechts; as they are in ours."

The spirit of chivalry, and the ideas which dictated it, also partook much of the general cast of their early manners. Their character, even then, was marked by traits of the most elevated kind. An enthusiastic love of honour, a detestation of treachery and falsehood, the highest sentiments of generosity, and the influential bonds of friendship, were habitual virtues, brought to the highest perfection among them. War being the element in which they delighted, the channel through which these feelings flowed was consequently impregnated thereby; and the rank they held in the favour of heaven, as well as in the hearts of the females, was estimated by their renown in arms. Influenced by such motives, it was not unusual for them, when on the point of some dangerous expedition, to bind themselves, by the most solemn oaths, not to survive their chieftain; and for friends, as among the fraternity of knights in later times, to unite in mutual defence, or the revenge of each other's death. These ruling principles and inviolable attachments, being copied by posterity, became their maxims; which, diffusing themselves into the education of the youth, early instilled similar feelings into their minds. These sentiments were afterwards considerably increased by the enthusiasm created in the youthful mind, from viewing the emblazoned trophies of the herald, which so conspicuously enabled their acquirer; from listening to the songs of the troubadours, whose lays extolled the gallant knight, whose conquests had raised him to honour and renown, or who had gloriously fallen in defence of his country. Thus intimately connected with their approved customs, knighthood became a dignity of the first rank in the feudal system, and conferred honour on kings, princes, and the nobility, as well as on those it elevated to a level with the noble.

From the then acceptance of the term noble, it was applied to those only who held fiefs subjected to military service, and who possessed the right of bearing armorial ensigns. Such were entitled to become candidates for the distinguished honour of knighthood; but those whose lands were not held on such service, and who were acquainted only with civil employments, were incapacitated to act in this rank. This prohibition, however, did not include the offspring of such persons. Those who held minor fiefs, or possessed hereditary estates, or who could not themselves attain the dignity of knight, could procure for their children the ensigns of nobility attached to military service. This was effected by becoming the vassal of some powerful baron, whereon his son had the advantage of obtaining a station in the household of the lord.

It was the custom of the great, in order to mark the extent of their power and magnificence, to keep in constant attendance a numerous retinue of youth, children of their superior tenants, who thereby acquired the accomplishments conducive to their future fortune. The denomination page was given to such, previous to their investiture with arms. When arrived at proper age, the condition of esquire was next assumed; in that character they received arms, with which they were invested; the page was presented at the altar, where, after some ceremonies, the priest delivered to him a sword and girdle, bestowed with many benedictions. So soon as the youth was advanced to that estate, he attached himself to some valourous knight of high renown; each knight being allowed the attendance of a certain number of esquires, according to his dignity. This excited to personal bravery; for the only path to the attainment of the highest honours of chivalry, was by the aspirant evincing courage, united with the finer sentiments of the heart.

The honour of this promotion was still more generally diffused during the crusades and other wars. In those times, the sure reward of valour was the acquisition of rank and dignity; which caused the sons of citizens and others, who were not accounted noble by blood, to be eager to engage in them, and acquire nobility by personal merit. In contradistinction to such, those that inherited nobility from their ancestors were considered more eminently noble, and were styled gentlemen of blood; whilst the original acquirer of armorial ensigns, with his sons, were called gentlemen of coat armour. The custom of receiving the honour of knighthood on the field of battle then became general; where it was conferred by a slight or formal blow of the sword. Although, in such instances, the usual oaths were dispensed with, yet it was always understood that the necessary obligations were implied, and which seldom failed of being attended to.

It may be gathered from Boulainvilliers, in his fifth letter on the ancient parchments of France, that the honours of knighthood were restricted to such as excelled in personal merit, and the accomplishments suitable to the profession of arms, at the accession of Hugh Capet. At that period, as represented by the above author, violence and oppression, leagued with licentiousness, were continuing to make dreadful inroads on the happiness of mankind in general. This induced the philosophic and good to associate, and use every means, to suppress wickedness, and procure peace and justice. To attain this, a system of laws, adapted to the military profession, and universally received by that order, were framed by Haimon, Archbishop of Bourges. Those passed in the councils of Bourges, Limoges, and Clermont; the last of which likewise ordained, that every person who was noble, and above twelve years of age, should swear to his observance, between the hands of his bishop; and that none should be admitted to do homage for any fief, without renewing this oath: "To defend the Christian religion; faithfully to practise the morals of it; to defend widows, orphans, and the weaker sex; not to make war on account of goods or effects, but to let such disputes be decided judicially; and to keep the 'truces of God,' not to commit hostilities during the feasts and their eves, nor between Wednesday evening and Monday morning, under the penalty of death, or of abandoning Christendom." By these forms, the clergy accumulated power; for, being invested with the right of receiving, and also of punishing, the breach of oaths, they then attributed to themselves the right of conferring knighthood. Knights themselves were likewise empowered to confer this honour; but neither the prelate nor the knight could legally elevate an individual to this rank, unless he were previously noble. The sovereign of the state possessed alone the power of rendering a person noble; who was considered completely so, when he had received the honour of knighthood.

The path to the highest elevation of chivalry being thus open to the meritorious, it is not to be wondered that every avenue to its attainment became crowded with competitors; especially, when we consider that the necessary virtues for the acquisition were so congenial to their nature, and that their ecclesiastical government imposed its offices as a duty. The aged, too, adverted to their triumphs with pleasure, recounted their marvellous exploits, and used every means whereby they might incite the succeeding generation to exert themselves in all the duties of knighthood. The mode of life also recommended itself to the youthful gallant, or the stout warrior; it being necessary for them, that they might extend their knowledge, and gain an acquaintance with the chivalry of the neighbouring nations, to visit their separate courts. Here they were received with the greatest distinction; each prince being desirous of attaching to himself as many of those brave partisans as he could induce by his magnificence, and the most flattering testimonials of respect. When publicly travelling, and not under the restriction for the performance of some vow, which prohibited to the contrary, it was with the greatest pomp their condition would allow. The armour of the knight, and the gorgeous caparison of his steed, were both highly embellished with his hereditary armorial bearings. His shield was constantly displayed, and by the badges thereon he was known; and this also proclaimed the birth of the visitant, at the tournaments, tilts, or jousts, which were then so commonly held.

Such are some of the causes to which we may attribute the amazing increase in the numbers of the knights of chivalry. They formed themselves into many social orders and fraternities, and assumed different badges of cognizance. These, with the more recent orders, are enumerated, arranged, and historically defined, in a subsequent part of this Work. See ORDERS OF KNIGHTHOOD.

SECTION II.

HERALDIC ensigns, which were rendered more general and conspicuous by the usages of chivalry, acquired the appellation of armories, or arms, from their being exhibited on armour, and springing from the customs of war. Besides adorning the shield and helmet, they embellished a splendid surcoat, or tabard, which was commonly worn by warriors over their armour, like the Roman tunica palmata; whence the term "coats of arms." It is generally considered that this tabard, or the coat of arms itself, is only a continuation of the sagum, or short vest, formed from the skin of a wild beast, which was worn by the ancient Germans, and covered the shoulders and breast. Du Cange expressly observes, in his first dissertation, that "the coat of arms was the ordinary dress of the ancient Gauls, by them termed sagum; whence the French derive their word saye, sayon." On the authority of Tacitus, we may state, that the sagum was gradually improved by spots, and ornaments of different furs; and that it became otherwise adorned, according to the rude fancy of those distant ages, is asserted by several authors. Cluverius particularly describes the different forms and ornaments of the German sagum, representing that it was a sort of cloak, clasped before, adorned with streaks of various colours, sometimes even of gold and silver, and also adverts to the affinity between them and the armorial bearings. Herodian states that they ornamented it with silver; and Pliny, when treating of the texture of cloth of gold, ascribes the invention of the chequer to the Gauls.

In the above historical remark, we may trace the origin of the different tinctures, furs, &c. which are the materials of the art of blazonry. It is probable that when the sagum became a coat of arms, the same stripes and chequers were retained, and the other acquired embellishments added thereto. According to Favine, the Franks, struck with the gay appearance of the sagum, striped of various colours, worn by the Gauls, assumed that habit for a length of time, instead of their own. It is the opinion of some learned individuals, that such stripes, and combinations of stripes, in various positions, first brought into use those armorial figures termed honourable ordinaries; which are not called so, as forming, more than other heraldic bearings, tokens of superior honour or merit, but because they are more ordinarily or generally employed in forming insigniæ of honour. Some writers, among whom we may note Menestrier, have given a different origin to them, affirming that they were copied from the pieces of wood which formed and made up the barriers of the lists at the tournaments; but with little or no foundation. Nisbet supposes that the principal ordinaries are all derived from the cross; this opinion has more probability in its favour, as that figure was displayed on the imperial standard of Rome, so early as the fourteenth century, when it succeeded the eagle, which, before that time, had flourished on the Roman banners. It is also stated by Eusebius, that the cross was represented on the tombs of the primitive Christians, and the monogram, which ensigned the pole, or staff of the Labarum, or banner of the cross, (described in Gibbon's history of the empire) is said to have been engraven on the tomb of St. Laurence, and many other martyrs, and to have been borne by the Emperor Constantine on his helmet, who also caused it to be represented on the shields of his soldiers. At the same time, the cross was displayed on the shields and banners of the imperial armies; and it was used as an ornament for the sacerdotal vestments, as appears from the Bolandists Lives; and Chambers states, on the authority of Tertullian, that the primitive Christians, even among the laity, had their mantles adorned with crosses.

From these remarks, it will appear, that several armorial figures were used as personal decorations, and in the display of military grandeur, before the establishment of heraldry as a system; after which, they became specifically appropriated to its purposes.

The customs of chivalry, as before observed, contributed much to the improvement of heraldry. To excite and animate that peculiar spirit, tournaments, and other sumptuous exhibitions of warlike exercises, were instituted; these, together with the crusades, rendered arms more elegant, by additional embellishments, and still more diversified, by extending the number of charges: they also attached higher value to their acquirements: as, without possessing such insignia of nobility, none could become candidates for the acquisition of honour at the Olympic games of chivalry. There are several writers, who, from the connexion of heraldry with those customs, have ventured to assert, that the institution of armories may be referred to the tournaments, which were held towards the end of the tenth century; their growth, to the crusades; and their perfection, to justs, and other feats of arms. The fallacy of such statements, however, is obvious, since it is generally allowed that it was one of the first institutions by which Henry of Saxony regulated these ceremonies; that none should be allowed to exercise at tournaments, unless they could prove themselves gentlemen of hereditary coat-armour.

The impulsatory effects on the manner of life, from the association of warlike habits and ideas, among a people for such a length of time, must be such, that it will be but to few of their institutions that a clear origin may be traced. The principles, the amusements, nay, the most decisive laws, which chivalry supplied, we find to flow from such a source; and although it was not till a later period, when magnificence and pomp were introduced, that tournaments and justs were properly instituted, yet we may suppose that their introduction into that form was produced by a long concatenation of customs, which, whilst they advanced, gathered a more material form, till they became a source of delight, of pageantry, and of the acquisition of honour. The tournaments were not only equal to the Olympic games of the ancients, but much surpassed them in point of humanity, generosity, and honour. Judicial combat, which, in ages of chivalry, often formed as great a display, in point of show, as the tournament, is also allowed to have originated with the remotest Goths, who allowed no other tribunal, and appealed to their own right arm alone to execute vengeance, or to prove their innocence. The same mode was observed by their descendants; for the nobles, proud and fierce, disdained any custom which had the appearance of restraint; and considered that vengeance, by no means adequate, which was not personally taken. With the regulation of governments, however, courts of chivalry were established, whose officers were empowered to decide such quarrels; or, as the alternative, to appoint the time, place, lists, &c. for meeting, with a due attendance of officers of justice and heralds, and there leave the parties to decide the cause with their weapons.

It may be inferred from the treatise on heraldry, in the first volume of Edmondson, that the emperor Henry the first, surnamed the Birdar, was the first prince, who, by solemn ordinaries, instituted and established the performance of public tournaments and justs at stated periods. After alluding to various suppositions concerning the cause, Francisus Modius, a learned and correct author, is referred to; on whose authority it is stated, "that one of the emperor's courtiers, named Philip, who had travelled into England and France, and there seen the nobility running at the ring, combating at the barriers, and performing other martial exercises, on his return home, represented them in so advantageous a light to his master, that the emperor determined to institute the like practices within his own dominions; and, thereupon, commanded the palatine of the Rhine, and the dukes of Bavaria and Franconia, in conjunction with the before-mentioned Philip, to draw up proper articles for regulating those meetings and exercises, agreeably to the practice used in England and France, on the like occasions: and that such articles, being accordingly prepared by the commissioners, and approved by the emperor, were, in the year 938, published in his court, and ratified by an imperial constitution; whereby it was also ordained, that tournaments should every third year be solemnized in Germany and the countries belonging thereto."

According to these institutions, which were afterwards generally adopted throughout Europe, all princes, lords, barons, and gentlemen, were entitled and invited to exercise at these games, providing they possessed the necessary requisites; which were to be, as before noted, gentlemen of coat armour, and to prove themselves at least of four descents of noble parentage, either paternally or maternally. All attempts at encroachment on those rules, when detected, were severely punished; and those persons whose honour was sullied by crime, were likewise excluded from taking a part in such diversions, though otherwise privileged by hereditary rights. The persons who were desirous to exercise, visited the lists some days previous to the nominated time for the commencement of the tournaments, completely armed, with liveries the same as they intended there to use, having their armorial bearings depicted on their shields, and embroidered on their surcoats and the caparisons of their horses. In this visit, each was preceded by his esquire, likewise on horseback, who bore in his right hand his master's tilting spear, with a pennon, charged with his arms, attached thereto: and in his left, the helmet, which was to be worn in the exercise, ornamented with lambrequins, ladies' favours, and further adorned with a torse or wreath, of the prevailing tinctures in the arms, and surmounted by the crest or device. On arriving near the barriers, it was made known by the sounding of a trumpet, when the appointed judges, who presided over the sports, came forth and met them. To those were made known the quality of the person, his name, armorial bearings, and other proofs of his possessing the requisite qualifications; which, after decision, the officers registered and recorded in their books. After this, the shield and helmet, displaying their appropriate honours and decorations, were hung above the tent or pavilion which he occupied; or, sometimes, on the barriers, trees, or other convenient places, near the place of justing. They were thus conspicuously displayed in the interim between the beginning of the sports, that each individual might, in time of combat, be publicly recognised by those badges. Among the whimsical introductions of pageantry, it became customary for the pages who attended and guarded the armour, to appear disguised, sometimes in the likenesses of Savages, Saracens, Moors, Sirens, &c.; and oft in the skins of various kinds of animals. It was their business, in conjunction with the appointed officers, or heralds, to take down the names and arms of such as challenged their master to combat. The mode of challenging was thus: the knights, or persons admitted to tourney, touched each other's shield with such weapons, either blunts or sharps, as they chose to just with; the attendants particularly noticing which of these was used; for oft, from private or national animosity, the combatants were induced to offer mortal combat; and, when so inclined, each touched the shield of his adversary with sharps, or the sharp end of his weapon; but when only a trial of skill was intended, the contrary method was made use of, which sufficiently displayed their amicable intentions. In such cases, honour was their scope, and animosity was avoided, as no disgrace attended the vanquished; to whom, according to the precepts of chivalry, the victor behaved with the kindest attention, palliating the defeat, by ascribing the victory to the fate of arms, and encouraging him to expect similar advantages on another opportunity. Yet such was their desire for victory and renown at these military exercises, that when they charged, it was to the full extent of their might, and with so much fury that their lances were often shattered to pieces at the encounter against their coats of mail. The honour of the victory was also more enhanced by the prizes being presented by ladies, who constantly prepared chaplets, and other ornaments, to reward the bravest knights. They also presented them with ribbons, or scarfs, which were termed ladies' favours. This appears to have been the origin of the ribbons which distinguish so many orders of knighthood.

As these martial exhibitions became exceedingly prevalent in this country, and constituted the delight of our ancestors, it is presumed that a more particular description of those in England, with their regulations, will be interesting. It does not appear, if the authority of Colombiere, and other well reputed writers, may be relied upon, that we deviated materially from the institutions and arrangements invented and adopted by the Germans and French; but, on the contrary, when intricacies occurred, which rendered the decision of victory difficult, and which often happened from the number of combatants who engaged at the same time, their institutes were resorted to for final decision. A profusion of grandeur and magnificence constantly attended their display; the cost of which, except the equipage of the combatants, was supplied from the royal purse. It was also the policy of the Norman kings, by whom most of the foreign customs were introduced, to render them as attractive as possible; for the people of England being attracted by, and exceedingly attached to, such exhibitions, they were used as means for conciliating their affections, and also for exciting a warlike spirit among them.

Although during the reigns of Henry and John, many splendid meetings of this kind were held, yet they were more frequently celebrated, and with a still greater degree of elegance, during the chivalrous times of Edward III. A particular one is recorded, which occurred A.D. 1343, during the last-mentioned reign; which the king commanded should be proclaimed in the principal states of Europe: it lasted fifteen days, and was attended by many noble and distinguished foreigners.

A military triumph of this kind was appointed by Richard the second, A.D. 1390; in which his majesty rode in procession from the Tower to Smithfield, attended by sixty knights, and as many ladies of the court, sumptuously apparelled. In passing through Cheapside, a proclamation was made, that those knights would attend the lists on Sunday and Monday following, to challenge all comers. The same had been previously proclaimed in different parts of England, and also in Scotland, France, Germany, Flanders, Brabant, and Hainault; which induced many of the knights and nobility of those kingdoms to visit this country, in order to accept the challenge. Among these were many of great skill and reputation in arms, who gained much honour in the combat; as likewise did many of our English nobles. To the victor of the just, if a stranger, was adjudged a golden crown, presented by the queen and the ladies of her court; but if one of the sixty knights, he was to receive a rich bracelet. The English knights also promised to present the most skilful, if a stranger, with a valuable horse, caparisoned; and if an Englishman, with a falcon.

The English nobility, whose predilection for those exercises was great, gained much renown for their general superiority in the tournaments, &c.; to which they, in common with those of other nations, were also invited, when any such were held by the different European states. Segar gives an account of a splendid pageant of this sort, held in France, occasioned by the challenge of three French knights, named Boncequant, Roy, and St. Pie; which challenge, according to that author, was as follows.

"The great desire wee have to know the noble gentlemen inhabiting neere the kingdome of France, and therewith longing to make triall of their valour in armes, have mooved us to appeare at Ingueluert, the 20 of May next, and there to remain thirty dayes. We also determine to be accompanied with other noble gentlemen, louers of armes and honour, there to encounter all commers with lances, either sharpe, blunt, or both; and every man shall be permitted to run five courses.

"We, likewise, hereby give you to understand, that such order is taken, as every one of us shall have his shield and empreaze hanging on the outside of the pavilion; to the end, if any of you desire to runne, then the day before, you may with a wand, or such a lance as you intend to run with, touch the shield; and whoso meaneth to try his fortune, both with blunt and sharpe, must touch the shield with either, and signifie his name to him that has our said shields in keeping.

"It is, moreover, ordered, that every defender may bring with him one other gentleman, in lieu of a padrin, to encounter us both, or single, as it shall please them. Where-with, we pray and desire all noble and worthy gentlemen (of what nation soever) to belevee, that no pride or malice hath moved us to this enterprise, but rather an earnest desire to see and know all such noble gentlemen as are willing to make proof of their vertue and valour, without fraude or coviu. In witsse whereof, every one of us have signed these letters with our seales and empreaze. Written and dated at Montepessolane, the 20 of November, 1389.

(Subscribed) "BONCEQUANT. ROY. S. PVE."

It is said, that above one hundred knights and gentlemen repaired from this country to France, to accept this challenge; among whom were many noble men of the first rank, and the English monarch, incognito. At the place appointed, they caused green pavilions to be erected; over the entrance of which, they suspended their respective shields, &c. The sports lasted four days; during which the English knights gained much commendation for their honourable and skilful behaviour in the contest.

In the reigns of several of the sovereigns subsequent to that of Richard II. tournaments continued to be held with equal pomp; and were, till later centuries, celebrated with magnificence during Lent, in Smithfield; and more particularly those which occurred in the reign of Henry VIII.

The most brilliant one, solemnized in this reign, took place in 1520, when the rival kings Henry and Francis met in the valley between Guisnes and Ardres, which from its profuse and lavish embellishments, was called "Le Champ de Drap d'or." The kings chose to them fourteen others, seven from each of their respective kingdoms, and challenged all comers to run at the tilt, and fight both at the tourney and the barrier. The ceremony was conducted by heralds, and previously proclaimed through the realm of France, by Thomas Benoilt, Clarencieux; and through Germany, by T. Wall, Norroy King of Arms.

Another remarkable one, on account of its being held in the night, by torchlight, took place in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, which was solemnized within her majesty's palace, at Westminster. In this combat, the Earl of Essex, with twelve knights, gorgeously dressed, the earl and his horse in white cloth of silver, and the rest in white satin; and the Earl of Rutland, with a like number, apparelled in blue, took opposite sides. To add to the richness of this scene, a magnificent chariot appeared in the middle of the lists, in which was a fair damsel, who, conducted by an armed knight, approached her majesty, whom she addressed in an appropriate manner, in the French tongue; after which, the queen gave the signal for assault, and the games commenced. In this reign, triumphs, or annual exercises of arms, were also held; which took place on the 17th November. These originated with Sir Henry Lea, K. G. Master of the Queen's Armory; who voluntarily vowed, that, unless infirmity, age, or other accident, did impeach him, he would, during his life, yearly present himself at the tilt, armed, in honour of her majesty. This he continued to do, till the infirmity of old age compelled him to resign; when he recommended the office to the Earl of Cumberland, and these ceremonies remained to be held with great pomp.

If any length of time had passed between the performance of such ceremonials, the form, or rules, were republished by the earl marshal, or such officer as had the regulation of them, as in the following instance, which is a list of "The ordinances, statutes, and rules, made by John Lord Typtoft, Earle of Worcester, Constable of England, by the Kinges commandment at Windsor, the 29th of May, anno sexto Edwardi quarti, to be observed and kepte in all manner juste of Peers royal within this realme of England, referring always to the Queene, and the Ladyes present the attrebuttion and gift of the prize, after the manner and forme accustomed to be attrebutted for their demerites according to thes articles ensuinge.

"5. Item. He whosoever shall fight and dothe not shoue his sword to the judges before shal winne no prize. Yet it is to be understood, that the challengers may wyne all these prizes against the defendants. The maynetayners may take order of assystaunce of the noble men of suche as they shall best lyke."

Then follows a notice, that it is illegal for any man to just, except "he be well knowu unto the King of Armes of the province to be a gentleman of armes, blood, and descent," with a declaration of some other necessary ceremonies.

The combatants at the tournament generally exercised on horseback; but sometimes they performed combats on foot. When any one was inclined to try his skill, either or both ways, he notified his intention, by suspending two shields above the entrance of his pavilion, one by the right, and the other by the left corner; the adverse person, that offered to fight on foot, signified as much, by touching the shield which hung by the right corner; whilst, on the contrary, he who chose rather to exercise on horseback, touched that which hung by the left. According to the "Memoirs of Chivalry," it was customary in the early times, to exhibit through the cloisters of some ancient monastery, the coat of arms, helmets, &c. of those who designed to enter the lists, that they might be viewed by such lords, ladies, and young gentlemen, who desired to see them; there also attended a herald, who named to the females the persons to whom they belouged; and if, amongst those pretenders, there were found any one, of whom a lady had cause to complain, either for speaking ill of her, or for any other fault, or injury, she touched his shield of arms, to demand justice; and left her cause to be decided by the judges of the tournaments.

Having already mentioned how consonant to the feelings of our ancestors, was judicial combat, or the deciding a quarrel by the fate of battle, both for the manner of redress, and as offering occasion for the signaling of those pageants, in which they took so much delight; we shall now proceed to give a summary view of their order, and to notify their regulations, in such instances as were under the cognizance of the court of chivalry; with a brieft notice of some of the most particular that have taken place in England.

It is most probable, that such a mode of deciding quarrels would be the alternative, to which the people of all nations would resort, before the effects of civilization taught them to seek more legitimate redress.

The order of single combat was among the code of laws which William the Conqueror introduced into this country, and was encouraged through many successive reigns. The same rule, which governed the tourney, was applicable in this instance; as without the qualifications which constituted a gentleman of blood and of coat armour, the protection of the court of chivalry was not afforded. The process of this mode of law was most decisive; for the vanquished was adjudged guilty, and, if the case required it, immediately led to execution. Proofs by witness or circumstantial evidence were seldom resorted to; for the one party mostly made asseverations of the guilt of the other, which the accused denying, threw down his gauntlet, or any other gage: this being challenged by the accuser, he likewise threw down his to the other, intimating, by so doing, his willingness to prove the truth of the assertion by the fate of battle, in which the righteous party confidently anticipated victory, through the favour and justice of heaveu. The principal and general causes, which produced these meetings, were treasonable practices, and words against the sovereign or state,—crimes and defamation, which threatened either life or property. When combat for life was to be the issue of any of these disputes, the gages, or a cartell of challenge, was preferred to the earl marshal, with a petition that he would obtain the license of the sovereign for a solemn combat.

"The Order of Combats for Life, in England, as they are anciently recorded in the Office of Arms at London.

"1. The cartell, or bill of quarrel, as well of the challenger's behalf as of the defender's, was brought into the court, before the constable and marshal. And when the truth of the cause of quarrel could not be proved by witness nor otherwise, then it was permitted the same should receive trial by force of arms; the one party by assailing, the other by defending. The constable, as vicar-general unto the king, assigned the day of battle, which was to be performed within forty days next following, whereunto both the challenger and defender condescended. Then were the combatants commanded to bring in sufficient pledges for surety, that they and every of them should appear, and perform the combat, between the sun rising and going down, of the day appointed for the acquittal of their pledges; and that they, nor any of them, should do, or cause to be done, any molestation, damage, assault, or subtlety, against the person of his enemy, either by himself, his friends, his followers, or other person whatsoever.

"In what sort the King commanded the place of Combat to be made.

"The king's pleasure being signified to the constable and marshal, they caused lists, or rails to be made, and set up in length threescore paces, and in breadth forty paces. The place where the lists were appointed was upon plain and dry ground, without ridges, hills, or other impediments. At either end of the lists was made a gate, or place of entry, with a strong bar to keep out the people. For the guarding of either gate, one sergeant-at-arms was appointed, and commanded not to suffer any man to approach within four feet. The one gate opened towards the east, the other towards the west, being strongly barred with a rail seven feet long, and of such a height that no horse could pass under or over the same.

"In what sort the King did sit to behold the Combat.

"On the day of battle, the king used to sit on a high seat, or scaffold, purposely made; at the foot whereof was another seat for the constable and marshal, who, being come thither, called before them the pledges, as well of the defendant as of the challenger, to be shown and presented to the king, there to remain within the lists as prisoners, until such time as the challenger and defender were come, and had performed all their ceremonies.

"In what sort the challenger used to present himself to Combat.

"The challenger did commonly come to the east gate of the lists, and brought with him such armours as were appointed by the court, and wherewith he determined to fight. Being at the gate, there he staid until such time as the constable and marshal arose from their seat and went thither. They being come to the said gate of the lists, and beholding the challenger there, the constable said, 'For what cause art thou come hither thus armed? and what is thy name?' Unto whom the challenger answered thus:—'My name is A. B. and am hither come, armed and mounted, to perform my challenge against C. D. and acquit my pledges; wherefore, I humbly desire this gate may be opened, and I suffered to perform my intent and purpose.' Then the constable did open the vizor of his head-piece to see his face, and thereby to know that man to be he who makes the challenge.

"These ceremonies ended, the constable commanded the gate of the lists to be opened, whereat the armed man, with his necessaries and counsel, entered. From thence he was brought before the king, where he remained until such time as the defender was come thither.

"In like manner, the defender appearing, did make request unto the constable and marshal, desiring that they would be pleased to deliver and discharge his pledges. Whereupon the said constable and marshal did humbly desire the king to release them, because the defender is already come, and presented before his majesty, there to perform his duty.

"But, in case the defender did not come at time convenient in the day appointed, then did the king deliver his pleasure unto the constable, and he reported the same unto the marshal, who forthwith did give order unto the lieutenant that the defender should presently be called to appear by the herald-marshal of the king of the south, called Clarencieux; and, in case the herald-marshal of the king of the south was not present, then was the proclamation made by some other herald. But, if the combat was performed in the north, on the other side of the river Trent, in the circuit of the king of the north, called Norroy, then was the marshal to make proclamation; the words whereof was to this effect:—

'O yes! C. D. defender in this combat, appear now; for, in this day, hast thou taken upon thee to acquit thy pledges in the presence of the lords, constable, and marshal, and also defend thy person against A. B. who challenged thee to maintain the cause of this combat.'

"This proclamation was made thrice at every corner of the lists: but, if, at the second time, the party appeared not, then the herald did add these words:—'The day passeth; and, therefore, come without delay.' And if, in case the said defendant appeared not before noon, but staid until the third hour after, then did the herald, by commandment of the constable and marshal, in the beginning of the proclamation, say, 'A. B. appear in haste, and save thine honour, for the day is well near spent wherein thou didst promise to perform thine enterprize.'

"It was also used that the constable's clerk should, in a book, record the hour of the combatants appearing within the lists, either on foot or horseback, in what sort they were armed, of what colour the horses were, and how they were in all points furnished.

"It was also anciently used that the constable moved the king in favour of the combatants, to know whether his majesty were pleased to appoint any of his nobility, or other servants of reputation, to assist them for counsel in combat.

"The constable and marshal did survey the lances and other weapons wherewith the combat should be performed, making them equal and of even measure.

"The constable also appointed two knights or esquires unto the challenger, to keep the place free from impediments. The like was also done for the defender.

"The constable did also move the king to know whether his majesty, in person, would take the oaths of the fighters, or give him and the marshal authority to do it out of his presence.

"The constable also did send the marshal unto the challenger and his counsel to make ready his oath, declaring that, after that ceremony, all protestations should be void.

"After these preparations, the constable caused his clerk to bring forth the book, whereupon the combatants were solemnly sworn.

"The first Oath.

"The constable, having caused his clerk to read the challenger's bill, and calling him by his name, said, 'Dost thou conceive the effect of this bill? Here is, also, thine own gauntlet of defiance. Thou shalt swear by the holy Evangelists, that all things contained therein be true, and that thou maintain it so to be upon the person of thy adversary, as God shall help thee, and the holy Evangelists!'

"The oath thus taken, he was led back unto his former place, and the constable did cause the marshal to produce the defender, who took the like oath. This oath was ever taken the parties kneeling, unless it pleased the constable and marshal to pardon that duty.

"The second Oath.

"The second oath, was also indifferently propounded to either of them, viz. 'That they had not brought into the lists other armour or weapon than was allowed; neither any engine, instrument, herb, charm, or enchantment; and that neither of them should put affiance or trust in any other thing than God and their own valours, as God and the holy Evangelists should help them!' That done, they were both sent to their places of entry.

"The third Oath was thus.

"The combatants, being again called, were commanded by the constable to take one the other by the hand, and lay their left hands upon the book: which done, the constable said, 'I charge thee, A. B. challenger, upon thy faith, that thou do thine uttermost endeavour and force to prove thine affirmation, either by death, or denial of thine adversary before he departeth these lists, and before the sun goeth down this day, as God and the holy Evangelists shall help thee!'

"The very same oath, in like manner used, was offered unto the defender; and, that done, the combatants returned unto their places, their friends, and counsellors.

"These ceremonies ended, the herald, by commandment of the constable and marshal, did make proclamation, at four corners of the lists, thus:—'O yes! O yes! We charge and command, in the name of the king, the constable, and marshal, that no man, of what estate, title, or degree soever, shall approach the lists nearer than four feet in distance, nor shall utter any speech, word, voice, or countenance, whereby either the challenger or defender may take advantage, upon pain of loss of life, living, and goods, to be taken at the king's good pleasure.

"Then the constable and marshal assigned a place convenient, within the lists, where the kings of arms, heralds, and other officers should stand and be ready, if they were called; for, afterwards, all things were committed unto their charge, as well on the behalf of the defender as the challenger; as, if any thing were forgotten in their confessions, either touching their lands or consciences, or that any of them desired to eat or drink; all these wants were supplied by the heralds, and none other.

"But here is to be noted, that no meat or drink might be given to the challenger without leave first asked of the defender, who commonly did not deny the request; and, after, the herald went unto the constable and marshal, and made them privy thereunto, desiring their favours that the combatants might eat, drink, or ease their bodies, if need were.

"After these orders taken, the constable and marshal did avoid the lists of all persons, save only one knight and two esquires, armed, to attend the constable, and the like number to await on the marshal, either of them having in his hand a lance, without head, ready to depart the combatants, if the king did command.

"Of more ancient time, the constable and marshal used to have certain lieutenants and servants within the lists, also, the one part to keep order on one side, and the others to look unto the other side; and, if the queen happened to behold the combat, then the constable and marshal awaited on the king's side, and their lieutenants attended on the queen.

"Then did the constable alone, sitting down before the king, send his lieutenant to the challenger to come unto him; and the marshal, with his lieutenant, did accompany the defender.

"The constable, thus set, did pronounce his speech, with a loud voice: 'Let them go—Let them go—Let them go, and do their best.'

"Upon which words pronounced, in the king's presence, the challenger did march towards the defender, to assail him furiously; and the other prepared himself for defence, as best he might.

"In the mean time, the constable and marshal, with their lieutenants, stood circumspectly to hear and see if any word, sign, or voice of yielding, were uttered by either of the fighters; and also to be ready, if the king should command the lances to be let fall, to depart the fight.

"The constable and marshal did also take regard, that the challenger and defender should appear at the day and hour appointed, whether they had about them any engine, or other unlawful things, as charms or enchantments; yet was it lawful, both for the challenger and defender, to be as well and surely armed as they could. And, if any of them would have his sword cut shorter than the standard; yet was not the other bound to have his cut to that measure, if he required that favour of the court. But if either the one or the other's sword passed the standard, then was that inequality to be reformed; or, if they were both over long, both were to be reformed.

"It had been, also, in more ancient time, used, that the constable and marshal should foresee that, if the king's pleasure was to depart the fight, and suffer the combatants to rest before the combat ended, that they should be parted in due time, when no advantage were. Likewise, that they should take heed that none of them should privately speak unto the other of yielding, or otherwise; for unto the constable and marshal appertained the witnessing and record of all things.

"And, in case the combat were for question of treason, he that was vanquished should be forthwith disarmed within the lists, by commandment of the constable and marshal. Also, the armour and weapons of the vanquished were, in one end of the lists, defaced, to his disgrace; and after the same drawn out, together with his horse. From thence, also, the man vanquished was drawn unto the place of execution, to be there beheaded or hanged, according to the custom of the country.

"The performance of all which punishment appertained only to the marshal, who ought to see all things done in his own presence. And, in case the challenger did not vanquish the enemy, then ought he to suffer the same pains that are due to the defender, if he were vanquished: but if the quarrel were upon a crime of less importance, the party vanquished should not be drawn unto the place of execution, but only led thither, to receive death or other punishment, according to the quality of the crime.

"If the combat were only for trial of virtue and honour, he that was vanquished therein should be disarmed, and put out of the lists, without further punishment.

"If it happened, that the king would take the quarrel into his hand, and make peace between the parties, without longer fight, then did the constable lead the one, and the marshal the other, out of the lists, at several gates, armed and mounted as they were, having special regard that neither of them should go the one before the other; for the quarrel, resting in the king's hand, might not be renewed, or any violence be offered, without prejudice unto the king's honour. And because it is a point very special in matters of arms, that he who leaveth the lists first, incurreth a note of dishonour; therefore, to depart the lists in due time, was ever precisely observed, were the combat for treason or other cause whatsoever.

"It is also to be remembered, that, without the principal lists, were ever certain counterlists, betwixt which two, the servants of the constable and marshal did stand: there stood, also, the king's sergeants at arms, to see and consider if any default or offence were committed contrary to the proclamation of the court, against the king's royal majesty, or the law of arms. Those men were ever armed at all pieces.

"The servants of the constable and marshal had charge of the place, and good order thereof. The king's sergeants took care to keep the gates of the lists, and be there ready to make arrest of any person, when they should be commanded by the constable or marshal. The fees of the marshal were all horses, pieces of armour, or other furniture, that fell to the ground, after the combatants did enter the lists, as well from the challenger as the defender; but all the rest appertained to the party victorious, whether he were challenger or defender. The bars, posts, rails, and every other part of the lists, were also the fees of the marshal.

From the foregoing, it will be seen, that no process of law could be more summary or decisive, or more fitting the times; immediate death awaited the attainted, who was considered guilty, if vanquished. If the challenger did not vanquish the defender before sunset on the day of fight, then was he himself adjudged vanquished; and could not after challenge any one: this victory and privilege belonged to the defender, all other favours being common to both combatants. The victory was always allowed him, whose adversary yielded himself, confessed himself unequal to the combat, or uttered any other speech tending to submission; who allowed, and implored pardon for his crime or misdemeanor, or otherwise repented; who ran away, and abandoned the lists or field, which was considered as the basest and most dishonourable action. He that was slain within the lists, was also considered without the victory; yet this sort of vanquishment was least dishonourable; though, by ancient custom, no man slain in public combats, could be buried in consecrated ground.

In cases which were not attended with, or judged worthy of, deprivation of life, the vanquished individual became the prisoner of the victor. It was also an ancient and honourable custom, to deliver up the person of him thus convicted, unto the prince of the place, or to some other, whom the vanquisher served and loved; but this was done on account of custom, not of duty. The whole panoply of the conquered belonged to his more fortunate adversary, who could also compel him to pay all charges attending the combat. He, the prisoner, might not be liberated, until either the payment of a stipulated ransom, or after five years service to the victor. But during such servitude, it was not lawful to employ the thrall in any base action or inglorious service, which left him the privilege of escaping, without subjecting himself to further penalties or inflictions. Among the instances which are on record of this sort of trial, and the parties to whom the king granted the combat, we shall now detail a few of the most memorable. Edmund, of the race of West Saxons, fought in combat with Canutus, king of Denmark, for the possession of the crown of England; in which fight, both the princes being wearied, they, by mutual consent, divided the lands between them, A. D. 1016. Robert Mounfort accused Henry, of Essex, of treason; and the matter being tried by battle, the said Henry was vanquished, A. D. 1163. Several combats were granted by Richard II. during his reign; amongst these was one, performed, A. D. 1344, between an esquire, born in Navarre, and an Englishman, whom the former accused of treason; but he of Navarre being vanquished, confessed that he was instigated by malice: the sentence of the king was, that he should be drawn and hanged. A combat was allowed, by Henry VI. to be performed between Sir Richard Woodville and a Spanish knight; but after the third blow given, the king stayed the fight. Among those combats, on account of the assumption of armorial bearings, we note the following, as most remarkable: those between two knights, Harding and St. Loe, in 1312; between Warburton and Gorges, in 1321; between Sitsit and Fakenham, in 1339; and between Scrope and Grosvenour, in 1389.

The decline of judicial combat may be traced from the reign of Lewis the Pious, who, in 1260, issued an edict through France, to prevent such an impious appeal to divine vengeance; and his example was followed by most of the states in Christendom. Its discontinuance was recommended to Henry II. by Glanville, who introduced the grand assize into our statute law. In subsequent reigns, its frequent occurrence was diminished; till at length public combats were altogether laid aside; yet some obsolete laws to enforce appeal to arms, were not expunged from our statute books till lately. An advantage was taken of this, in the case of Abraham Thornton, who was tried at Warwick, in 1817, for the ferocious violation and murder of Mary Ashford; and although acquitted by the jury, such was the dissatisfaction of the public at large, and more particularly of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood where the murder was committed, that a subscription was entered into, to defray the expense of a new prosecution. On an investigation of the circumstances, the secretary of state granted his warrant to the sheriff of Warwick, to take Thornton into custody, on an appeal of murder, to be prosecuted by William Ashford, the brother and heir at law of the deceased. He was accordingly lodged in Warwick gaol, until removed to London by habeas corpus, the proceedings on the writ of appeal being held in the Court of King's Bench, in Westminster Hall; where, on the 17th day of November, the prisoner, availing himself of this barbarous privilege, extended to him by the antiquated and absurd law under which he stood appealed, demanded trial by wager of battle. The folly of thus admitting that 'right should follow might' was particularly obvious in this case, for whilst the appellee was an athletic man of great muscular power, the appellant was of a delicate frame, and quite unequal to a personal combat with such an antagonist.

The revival of this obsolete law gave rise to repeated arguments of counsel on both sides, which were adjourned from time to time, till the 16th April, 1818, when the judges delivered their opinions seriatim; the substance of which was, that, sitting there to administer the law, not as they wished it to be, but as they found it, they considered the defendant entitled to claim trial by wager of battle: and the decision of the court was, "That there be trial by battle, unless the appellant show reason why the defendant should not depart without day."

On the 20th, time having been asked by the appellant's counsel, the matter was finally disposed of, the judgment of the court being, "That the defendant be discharged from this appeal, and that he be allowed to go forth without bail."

In consequence of this circumstance, an act was passed by parliament, in the 59th year of George III. to repeal the right of trial by battle.

We shall now return to the earlier history of heraldry, and, having set forth the reciprocal value which acted between armories and those splendid pageants, that so oft recurred, especially in France, during the reign of Hugh Capet, will pass on to that interesting era, when the chivalrous and valiant of Europe united in one common cause, which had the honour and protection of the Christian religion for its foundation; and although the ardour and enthusiasm evinced in its prosecution, were infuscated by superstition, and attended with cruelty, yet many benefits accrued from the association and union of so many different nations. Amongst the inventions and alterations which the necessities of the times produced, luminous additions were made to personal armorial ensigns, the principal of which we shall notice.

The Turks, having got possession of Judea, demanded exorbitant tribute of the Christians, who, from religious motives, visited the Holy Land; and the pilgrims who possessed not the means of payment, were oft suffered to perish, even at the gates of Jerusalem, without the gratification of having fulfilled their vows. This conduct much incensed the European princes; and, at the general council of Clermont, held in the year 1095, the hermit Peter, animated by zealous fervour, depicted the horrid barbarities of the Infidels in such an alarming manner, that the council finally adopted the resolution of recovering the Holy Land by force of arms. Besides the infatuated bigotry which possessed every mind, the predominancy of the ecclesiastical power, which was sanguine in such a cause, rendered an active part in these expeditions eligible; for thereby absolution from sin in this world, and eternal happiness in the next, were supposed to be obtained. The martial spirit of the age also forwarded such designs; the noble, the brave, the devout, all hastened to enlist themselves in such a glorious undertaking; kings and princes disregarded their splendour and ease, and devoted themselves to the call of the church, and of its persecuted sons. By these means a numerous army was collected from every part of Europe, and in the following year began the expedition, under the command of the brave Godfrey, Count of Bouillon.

As a badge of honour and distinction, every individual engaged in those wars, had the form of the cross sewed or embroidered on the right shoulder of his surcoat; hence the expeditions received the appellation of Crusades. The cross was also varied in colour and form, in order that the different nations might thereby be distinguished. The national distinction of the English was the white cross, as may be gathered from Tasso, who, however, more particularly refers to the third crusade, achieved within the same century as the first; the colour which the French then generally adopted was red, and their banner, which the King of France received, in vassalage, from the Abbot of St. Deunis, was composed of red taffeta, or strong silk, plain, without portraiture thereon; it was called the Oriflamme, and waved at the head of the French armies, from the twelfth to the fifteenth centuries; the Flemings assumed the green cross; and those who belonged to the states of the church were distinguished by the cross keys. Tasso, Bonjardo, Ariosto, &c. poets contemporary with different periods of the crusades, have exemplified, in a beautiful manner, the splendid banners, and armorial ensigns, borne by the assembled nobles, which illustrated the then general bearings.

Armories, before the period above alluded to, were simple in their design; the ordinaries, as the fesse, bend, pale, &c. were borne single, or the coat often consisted only in barry, paly, chequy, &c. or semée of crosses or de-lis. Afterwards, they had received the embellishments of romance, and joined the heterogeneous monsters of Gothic fancy, and also gained additional grandeur from the tournaments; but, during the crusades, concurring causes rendered it necessary for armorial charges to be greatly multiplied. The assemblage of so many different nations, among whom the utility of such distinction was acknowledged, caused their improvement and applications to be extended. The cross became subject to an almost indescribable number of forms; amongst those the cross fitchée, or pointed, may be supposed to be the first, for the conveniences of temporary erection for worship and of removal, an idea very probably suggested by the portable altars of the Romans. Amongst other charges then introduced into coat armour, were passion-nails, palmer's staves, the scrip and staff of pilgrimage, which princes and persons of distinction were invested with, who formally assumed the cross and escallop, or cockle-shell, which were the common badges of those that went on pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Peter at Rome, and St. James at Compostella, and was probably in allusion to the former occupation of the Apostles.

Much excitement was afforded to the Christian soldiers, during their campaign in Palestine, for the beautifying and adorning their armour with ornaments as splendid and dazzling as their fancies could suggest, from the glittering grandeur of their adversaries' equipage. The military attire of the Saracens was richly and profusely adorned; and the luxuriant treasures of the East were combined with great warlike display in their camps. Policy, and an emulation to vie in magnificence, prompted the chiefs to use every means for increasing their own display, by despoiling, and at the same time weakening, the strength of their enemies. Armorial ensigns, which had been restricted to a certain class of persons only, now became more generally diffused, as their attainment was found to be the incitement to glorious achievements, and a brilliant addition to the splendour of personal appearance; therefore, the brave were allowed to assume and delineate, at pleasure, commemorative of their exploits, and as armorial badges of distinction, certain of the spoils they had gallantly won from the Infidel; yet, at the same time, they acquired the suitable elevation of rank; for among the definitions of a proper gentleman of coat armour, it is said, that "the thryd is of killing a Sarasyn." Thus a multitude of charges were introduced, both for the shield and for the helmet, as crests. Among these were crescents, Saracens' heads, turbans, Moors, Turks, &c.; also cushions, the attendants of eastern luxury, water-bougets, or leathern conveyances of that element for the armies, whilst in the Arabian deserts; bezants, money struck at Byzantium; with numerous other bearings, either typical or assumed from some capture. The instance of the original assumption of the armorial bearings of Milan is in point with the last observation, and therefore introduced. During the first crusade, Otho, Viscount or Governor of Milan, killed, in single combat, under the walls of Jerusalem, a Saracen Emir, who had defied the Christian army. The emir's golden helmet, retained as a trophy by the conqueror, bore a crowned serpent devouring a child; and hence did this serpent become the armorial ensigns of the Visconti Dukes of Milan.

The high renown which attended those expeditions, and the desire of being considered to have acted with the greatest personal courage therein, which, in those unenlightened times, was generally believed to add to eternal as well as mundane glory, caused the armorial acquisitions that had been so attained to be continued, and displayed in every way possible, with the greatest degree of elegance. The same causes also rendered them dear to the offspring of the acquirer, as symbols which perpetuated the memory of the piety, virtue, and valour, of their ancestor; so that those bearings, thus assumed, became the hereditary gentilitia marks of families.

We have now taken a general view of the grand occasions which gave birth to heraldry, and effected its present useful, elegant, and scientific form. The intercourse which the laws of chivalry kept up between different nations, and the expeditions which for a time united them, would diffuse the same mode, in regard to this science, generally through Europe. Time, localities, and national habits, may now have produced some differences; and in some countries, armories, and their regulations, may be more obsolete than they are in others; but as constant mutability is attached to the customs of the earth, and its glory unsubstantial, as empires rise and fall, and the modes of government vary, and as the character or sentiments of nations change, this must be the case. From the histories of recent times, we know such instances to have occurred, that the monarchical or other despotic governments have changed places with the constitutive or democratical forms; and that popular clamour or outrage have for a time demolished, or desired to abolish altogether, the form of nobility, with all its appendages; and so pull down the venerable fabric of former ages. This has generally failed; and it must ever do so. In our government, wherein the sway is so happily blended, the same rank, dignity, and honours, have continued to add lustre to the memory of their acquirers, and to ennoble their inheritors, ever since they were first used in this country. We shall now, therefore, confine ourselves solely to this science, as connected with British history, endeavouring to describe its introduction and progress.

SECTION III.

BEFORE we enter into the progress of heraldry in England, it may not be improper to notice, that devices, similar to heraldic symbols, were early used in Wales. Roderic, surnamed the Great, Prince of Wales, in 843, bore, azure, a cross pattée, fitchée in the foot, or: he was descended from Cadwallader, who died about 690, and who bore the same. Aviragus, the brother of Guiderus, and King of South Britain, so early as the year 45, is said to have borne the same; from whom the pedigree of Cadwallader has been traced. It is remarked by Mr. Dallaway, that the different tribes of the principality of Wales, and the duchy of Cornwall, had not adopted the heraklic symbols of other nations, before their subjection to the English, by the conquest of King Edward I.; and that, by many of those families, scenes or delineations of particular circumstances, real or legendary, are still used as their paternal ensigns; such as the wolf issuing from a cave, a cradle under a tree, with a child, guarded by a goat, and many others of a like nature; and that, since their intercourse with the English nation, the lion rampant, and the plain ordinaries, compose, with few exceptions, all the escutcheons they have adopted. That such symbols should have been used, is not to be wondered at; for, in the choice of simple emblems, they accorded with all other nations. It was natural that they should place on their shields the figures of wolves, which they hunted, or of goats, which were of such use to them; for, in the early days of heraldry, men took, for their armorial bearings, those things which were most useful and natural to them in their various pursuits.

As heraldry, and the customs of France, had been introduced into England, so they were into Scotland. That nation being, by constant intercourse and alliance, more intimately connected with them, their feudal system, chivalrous customs, and heraldic regulations, were earlier and more strictly followed. We also find all those charges, so common in England, unknown among them; the armorial bearings of the chief were invariably borne by the whole of the collaterals, or clan, differenced by certain ordinaries or charges, or the position of them. There are some very early and remarkable instances of the use of heraldic ensigns in that country, related by Nisbet, which proves this ancient and hereditary usage: from among which, for illustration, we shall select the following.

In the reign of Kenneth II. King of Scotland, about the year 840, a near relation of that monarch having been taken prisoner and hung by the Picts, a great reward was offered to any one who would dare to rescue the body from their possession; upon which a soldier presented himself, saying Dalzell, which signifies I dare. Having performed this dangerous task, he took the name of DALZELL, ancestor to the present Earl of Carnwath, and had the arms, crest, and motto, given to him as now borne by that family. The arms which have long been hereditary in the family of Hay, have their origin thus accounted for; when the Scots fled before the Danes at Long Cartey, a husbandman then at plough with his two sons, snatching the yoke in his hands, and therewith making defence, stopped the pursuit of the enemy, and thus gave his countrymen time to rally. To reward his valour, Kenneth III. gave him as much land as a falcon should fly over at one flight; and in the village of Hawkestone, the place is still shown where the bird settled. From the above circumstance the crest is taken; and, after the battle, the three countrymen appearing before their monarch with shields covered with blood, he assigned them for arms, argent, three escutcheons gules: this occurred previous to the year 904. The family of Keith obtained their arms in the year 1006, from the following circumstance. Robert, their ancestor, a chieftain among the Ceki, having joined Malcolm II. and being instrumental in obtaining the victory over the Danes, at the battle of Pan-bridge, himself having killed their general Camus; the king dipping his finger in Camus's blood, drew therewith four strokes on the victor's shield, giving him for his arms, argent, a chief paly of eight, argent and gules. Many other instances, of equal antiquity, are recorded in their histories, unnecessary to be added here.

The best authenticated and most early accounts we find on English record, of any devices having being used as marks of distinction, are about the period of the Saxon conquest. It appears, that when these conquerers made a partition of this kingdom, and established the Heptarchy, a particular device was assigned to each of the principalities, to be borne on their banners, whereby they might be distinguished. These devices were also considered as the gentilitia arms of the sovereign of each principality; for when one of their princes succeeded to the supreme power, he still retained the device, or distinction, which he had formerly borne. This was generally the case, till Edgar, surnamed the Peaceable, ascended the throne, when he added to the cross patonce, which we may suppose was his provincial ensign, four martlets; which number was increased to five by Edward the Confessor. On the completion of the conquest by William, we find the arms of Edward abandoned for those of the Norman Rollo; viz. gules, two lions passant or: to those, Richard I. added a third lion, which, from that time, became the hereditary bearing of his successors, and still continues to be the first and fourth quarterings of our national standard.

The quick progress and high estimation which attended heraldry in England, after the period of the Norman conquest, is apparent from the early custom of uniting it with every branch of the arts; so that the display might be more public, and the effect more brilliant and imposing in the eyes of the commonality. The sculpture of the Saxons, especially in basso relief, the Normans applied to armorial figures, rendering them fit to be used as ornaments of buildings; and thus connected them with the lasting monuments of architecture. The introduction of the mode that made armour the general internal embellishment of castles, is supposed to have sprung from the custom prevalent during feasts, and other public solemnities, of suspending behind each knight his shield, &c. Painting in enamel and distemper, attained great perfection, even in those early centuries; and we are informed, that, during the reigns of the three Edwards, Greek enamellers resided in England, who both practised and taught the art. In the researches of antiquarians, specimens have been discovered, which justify every conjecture. Among the decorations of this kind, in the nave of Westminster Abbey, were forty escutcheons, supposed to have been painted about the year 1270. The figures discovered round the tomb of Edward Crouch-back, Earl of Lancaster, who died in 1296, and the painting of the assassination of Thomas à Becket, in Canterbury Cathedral, both furnish armorial devices in this mode. The art of staining glass is contemporary with enamelling, and appears to have obtained much, as ornaments for the windows of churches. The uses of painting on glass, of the earliest antiquity, were appropriated to armories, scrolls bearing inscriptions, and portraits. In the windows of the Cathedral at Chartres, Thebault, Earl of Blois, living in 1218, is represented "vestu son blazon," as it was then usually expressed. Several accounts of delineations in this mode, so frequent in this country, are given by antiquarians, so early as the reign of Edward I.; and Mr. Warton places this custom in an era prior to the reign of Edward II.

At first, however, the cost of procuring the display of the arts was so great, that none but the nobles, and more wealthy knights, were able to procure it; but, in process of time, as this became more necessary, and the demand consequently greater, artists of inferior skill were encouraged, and in such numbers as sufficiently to evince the general usage of arms. Much information on this science has also been obtained from old rolls, illuminations of arms upon vellum, monastic chronicles and manuscripts, lists of knights serving in the royal camp, &c. In many of these last, the name and arms of each chief are very particularly detailed; one of the most ancient is entitled, "Les noms de Chevaliers en le Champ du Roo, Henri III. A.D. 1220." Another is the celebrated roll of Karlaverek, written in old French verse, wherein the banners and escutcheons of the chiefs, who attended King Edward I. in his expedition into Scotland, are most minutely described, and furnish specimens of the peculiarities of ancient blazonry. There is also another roll extant, in which is inserted the names and arms of nobles, bannerets, and knights, in the reign of Hayard II. amounting to two hundred and sixty.

Thus far, assisted by history and the researches of antiquity, we have attempted to prove the manner of the introduction, the original uses, and likewise the causes which produced the dissemination and general adoption of those distinguishing symbols termed arms; but as it is the case with all sciences and arts, that, when first established, they are in a comparative state of imperfection, with regard to the form they afterwards attain, so it has been with the science of heraldry. A gradual improvement, however, which is the consequence of every mode of utility, quickly brought heraldry to its zenith of splendour and perfection; which was effected, partly by the romantic customs of those ages, when personal prowess was considered the chief virtue whereby to obtain honour and glory, and partly through the pride of showing an honourable and worthy descent. Although, after the termination of the crusades, in which Richard joined, arms became general, and were very often borne by families in an hereditary way; yet, no institution of this kind being firmly established till the time of Henry III. any new incident or fancy caused an alteration or entire change. Mr. Waterhouse remarks, in his defence of arms, that at this time they kept no constant coat, but bore sometimes their paternal, and sometimes their maternal, or adopted arms; which variation causing great obscuration in history, it is not easy to fix, upon true and warrantable grounds, the constant lineal bearing of coats, in a line of unchanged descent, before the time of Henry III. The celebrated Camden, on whose knowledge many authors have relied, had likewise the same opinion, which he gives in the following words: "Shortly after the conquest, the estimation of arms began, in the expeditions to the Holy Land; and, afterwards, by little and little, became hereditary, when it was accounted an especial honour to posterity, to retain the arms which had been displayed in the Holy Land, in that holy service against the professed enemies of Christianity; and that we conceived at that time the hereditary use of them; but that the same was not fully established until the reign of Henry III.; for that, in the instances of the last Earls of Chester, the two Quincys, Earls of Winchester, and the two Lacys, Earls of Lincoln, the arms of the father still varied from those of the son." That such instances of variation have been frequent, may be proved from the fact, that, in many of the escutcheons of the eldest and most honourable families, the second quarter is occupied by the patriarchal bearing, and is blazoned by repeating the name, and adding, "as borne anciently." It was also become customary at this time, to charge the ordinaries, which before had constantly been plain; this was done, not on account of filiation, or any acquirement of seigniority, but in allusion to military service in the crusades, &c.

The reign of Richard II. may be particularized for the introduction of several novel modes of blazonry. This monarch, delighting in magnificent attire and personal splendour, was the cause of every ornament being added, that would more sumptuously adorn the apparel of the courtiers and nobles. Armorial bearings being found suitable for such purposes, they were no longer confined to the gorgeous array of the armed warrior, but formed the chief embellishment of the common habits of those who attended his court; and were frequently repeated on the just-au-corps, or bodice, the surcoat, and the mantle. A wider field was, therefore, now opened, not only for heraldic display, but also for invention; as it became common for the coat of arms, which before only admitted the hereditary bearings, now to be charged with those of the wife, by way of dimidiation or impalement, and likewise marshalling or quartering of heirs general. Crests and cognizances were also multiplied; and the mode of placing the escutcheon between two animals, as supporters, became more frequent. Indeed every custom, whereto was attached an idea of grandeur, utility, or value, included the use of them; and not only on dress were displayed those distinguishing ornaments, but they were exhibited on household furniture, in architecture, on floors executed in Mosaic work, as may be seen on the pavements of the Cathedral at Gloucester, and many other of our cathedral churches; also on plate, on the rich sepulchral brasses, the pilasters of the superb canopies, and often placed at each corner of the slabs of monuments; and, in fine, were introduced wherever any of their uses might be appropriated. Coins were early charged with escutcheons; and we are informed by Parrington, that those with which the scutagium were paid, were called escues, and had a shield impressed on them. Speed takes notice of a coin of Edmund, King of Sicily, brother of Henry III. of England, which was charged on one side with his escutcheon. Edward III. and his son, both issued coins charged with the badges of France and England; after this time, they were generally charged with the escutcheon and cognizances of the monarchs, in whose reigns they were issued; and supporters were also introduced on the "sovereign" of Henry VIII.

As a proof of the high estimation and sacred use, which arms were held in at this time, with regard to family and national right, we will here notice a memorable and tragical occurrence, that took place in the reign of Henry VIII.: we allude to the fate of the unfortunate Lord Surrey. The principal testimony brought forward, to support the charge of treason against that nobleman, was, the assumption of the arms of King Edward the Confessor, which the family of Howard had used in right of descent, by the authority of their sovereigns, for upwards of a century. This, with other particulars in his armorial bearings, his implacable enemies basely insinuated, avowed his pretensions to the crown, in opposition to the rights of his Majesty's offspring, and was thought sufficient evidence to authorize his condemnation.

As it is the aim of this work to give every possible information, with regard to our subject, it will be necessary to notice the custom of armorial distinctions being used by ecclesiastics, and by communities, civil and religious, which were altogether unconnected with military honours. After the uses of arms became known, acknowledged, and appropriated, and were used to ratify charters, and to add embellishment with utility, they were allowed in a specific manner, to be adopted by ecclesiastical orders, as well for sealing charters, as for affording ornaments to their monasteries; nor was this assumption contrary to the allowance of the court of chivalry, in the code of which it is written: "Arma dantur viris religiosis, non propter strenui tatem, sed propter honorum, quia honorabile est arma portare; ut doctor in legibus viginti armis per legem armorum fiet miles, non tamen propter ejus strenuitatem sed propter dignitatem."

It is also related by Guillim, that Charles IV. in consideration of the services of Bartholus, an eminent civilian, as a reward, gave him for his arms, or, a lion rampant, his tail forked, gules: which, at first, he feared to assume, judging himself unfit, as not being of martial renown; but that afterwards they were used by him and his posterity. The author also goes on to enlarge upon the utility of this precedent, and the benefit which accrued from such rewards being assigned to men, eminent for their virtues, which distinguish civil merit. It frequently happening, that the superiors of religious houses were of noble families, they, of course, retained their own devices, and often gave them as the badges of their societies; but the arms of the monastery were mostly those of the founder. In the papal hierarchy, the gradations thereof were, in a great measure, analogous to the higher degrees of secular dignity; and many of the bishoprics and other prelacies had temporal baronies annexed to them, termed "dignified fiefs." Thus, in several cases, the secular and ecclesiastical powers were vested in one clerical prince or lord, which would thus connect with them many of the feudal customs. Even chivalry itself was introduced into the church, and many of the clerical order acted as warriors. In the commencement of the twelfth century, Baldwin, King of Jerusalem, and Baldwin II. his successor, converted several of the fraternities of the monks, of the orders of St. Augustine and St. Benedict, into classes of knights, that they might defend the pilgrims, who resorted to the holy sepulchre. Hence originated the various orders of chivalry, headed by a grand master, and joining the clerical regulations with a military profession. In addition to the ordinary badges of knighthood, there were certain forms of the cross prescribed for the devices of the respective orders. In war, these were displayed on scarlet surcoats, as armorial insignia, above their coats of mail; and in peace, were worn embroidered on their clerical mantles, on the left side, near the heart. We may suppose it as probable, that it was such communities that first assumed heraldic distinctions, and that, this practice being followed by others of the ecclesiastical order only, it gradually introduced the custom of each society being distinguished by a particular badge.

After it was thought eligible to possess arms, and the bearing of them was restricted, it became customary for many, who were not entitled to coat armour, to invent and use certain marks, though not fashioned according to heraldic rules. These were generally used by wealthy merchants and citizens: and, when first invented, were adapted for the purpose of marking merchandise; but when they were displayed on escutcheons, they were found to answer the uses of distinguishing symbols: specimens are still to be seen, annealed to windows, or carved in wood and stone, about such buildings as they have erected. A shield of this kind is noticed in the Harleian MSS. and the following description given. "They be none armys, but a marke as marchants vse; for every man may take hyme a marke, but not armys, without an herawde or purcyvaunte." They were mostly composed of lines curiously joined together, by which, either the initial letters of the owner's name were formed, or whatever else his fancy suggested. Another practice had also become common, and of much esteem, especially among the ecclesiastics; this was, the mode of using, as arms, certain familiar figures, which were representative of the name of the bearer: such a mark of allusion was called a rebus. The custom is of French origin; and by them termed des armes parlantes. It was chiefly the employment of the monks, to apply those rebusses to proper names; and so much was it approved by them, that almost every church dignitary had his rebus, although entitled to hereditary arms. The analogy was sometimes very remote, and could only be understood by interpretation. If the name ended with "ton," the tun, or vessel, was generally used to illustrate it; as in the instance of Thomas Compton, Abbot of Cirencester, A.D. 1480; which was a comb and tun: it is exhibited in a window of stained glass, to which he contributed, in Our Lady's Chapel at St. Peter's, Gloucester. Some authors, however, differ in opinion concerning these representations, asserting that they were chiefly used for conveying some sentence, and that the motto was constantly annexed to the device, which were so dependant on each other, that the signification of neither could be taken separately; for example, by the motto "We must" placed upon a sun-dial, was meant to be conveyed the solemn truth, We must die all.

After various modes of utility had been attached to arms, so as to render them indispensable appendages of nobility and knighthood, the necessity of introducing therein specific marks, for distinction of collaterals, evidenced itself. It being allowed by the court of chivalry, that all the sons of an esquire might appropriate their father's device, a confusion of persons would consequently follow. To remedy this, we find, among early instances, a variation from the simple ordinary was often made, by adding thereto different charges, either in allusion to the virtues of the bearer, his military acquirements, or his feudal tenure. Another method of denoting filiation, and differencing the bearings, was, by adding thereto a certain ordinary or charge, as the bordure, label, canton, mullet, or cinquefoil. After the improvement and establishment of the regulations of heraldry, certain marks of distinction were appointed, which denote the different branches of a family to a great extent; but as they are particularized in the Glossary, we shall refer to that part of this work, under the term DISTINCTIONS OF FAMILIES.

It is only in those reigns, when military ardour, a taste for chivalrous amusements, or a desire for magnificence, has been the leading characteristic of the sovereign, that we may expect to find any particular advantage accrue to heraldry; thus we find that, during the reign of Richard III. much was contributed towards the establishment of this science. By this monarch, the heralds were first incorporated and assembled in a collegiate capacity; prior to that, they had been attendants upon the court, as the king's household servants, exercising a special jurisdiction in matters of chivalry. The early part of the reign of Henry VIII. was marked by a profusion of splendour; the king delighting in all manner of hastitudes, tournaments, and other pageants, occasioned every mode of magnificence to be renewed; and tabards, or surcoats of arms, were worn by the nobility, in preference to the most splendid apparel. A retrogression from the chasteness and purity which distinguished the armorial ensigns of the fifteenth century, now took place; beauty was sought in redoubling the ordinarities and charges almost to confusion; and this fashion has subsequently prevailed to such a degree, that the ancient and simple emblems, which were accounted most honourable, are no longer attended to.

About that time, cognizances became more generally used, and were worn by their retainers, and by the servants of the nobility, that thereby they might be distinguished. During the reign of Philip and Mary, much attention was paid to heraldry. A commission of visitation was directed to Thomas Hawley, Clarendon, "to correct all false crests, arms, and cognizances; to take notice of descents; and to reform all such as were disobedient to orders for funerals, set forth by King Henry VII.; whereby it is also provided, that all such as should disobey the same, should answer thereunto, upon lawful monition to him or them, given before the high marshal of England." Another commission, to the same purport, was issued in the fifth and sixth year of the same reign.

The public usage of arms had now, in a great measure, declined, and they were more particularly used as domestic ornaments, and connected with architecture, sculpture, and painting. The mansions of the great of this time exhibited them on various parts of the buildings; they were placed over the gate-way, and above the principal entrance: the hall continued to be ornamented with them, and the large projecting windows belonging thereto exhibited escutcheons, single, impaled, and quartered; illustrating, minutely, the connexions of the family; they adorned the ornamental parts of furniture, and were generally attached to the series of family portraits, each of which being marked by peculiar distinctions, was particularly calculated to elucidate their history.

A more general knowledge of the elements of heraldry now became necessary, as they were introduced to domestic and common notice. Although, in the following reigns of Elizabeth and James, chivalry lost much of its original splendour; yet they were, in a peculiar manner, favourable to the diffusion of heraldic knowledge. The more ancient and honourable in family were particularly tenacious of their bearings; whilst those who had risen, through a legal capacity, or commercial gains, to the rank of gentility, were ambitious to procure those ensigns. Thus, a general use of heraldic emblems prevailed; and, amid the search after knowledge, a more particular acquaintance with this science would be required; to satisfy which, we find numerous publications ushered forth. Treatises on this subject were extant before this time; for, with the introduction of printing into England, among other popular subjects, was selected that of coat armour; the first of which appeared A.D. 1486, in a work entitled, "The Boke of St. Alban's," principally translated from a MS. work, composed about the year 1441, by Nicholas Upton, the first author who reduced heraldry to a system. It cannot be supposed, that all the elements and rules of this science were formed by those authors, but that they were indebted to tradition for its uses and application: and receiving it according to the general acceptance, left the true origin of the figures, and the reason of their being adopted, altogether very unsatisfactorily defined. The general distinctions made, were with respect to the rank of the bearer; the subjects were his precise gradation in the line of his descent, and his acquirements of honour and property. "All coat armour was reduced under nine divisions, four of which were deemed perfect, and five, imperfect. Of the perfect kind, were those warranted by regular descent, and called abstract, or of the heir male without difference,—terminal, or of the brethren of the right line,—collateral, or of the brethren of the heir male,—and fixal, the third degree by right line of male heirs. The imperfect arms were those granted by the king with a lordship—the gift of a king devised by a herald—the ensign of a Saracen won in the field—the heir female of the ekler branch, and of bastardy." With the progress of knowledge, instead of quaint notions and absurd ideas, which prevailed in the first authors, as to its origin, clearer disquisitions, though sometimes mixed with a prolixity of classical knowledge, were introduced by succeeding writers. It is not within the compass of this work to take a critical view of heraldic treatises; but, as we may suppose the general knowledge of the science would keep pace with the information given thereon, by noticing the era when they became most numerous, we may infer its progress. Although, by literary aid, the elements of heraldry were now more universally and easily learned, it is a question whether from this any advantages were derived. It is very probable, that, from a desire to display such honourable emblems, many invented and assumed devices with others, yet often defective, and not according to the strict rules of the science. Thus we may trace the decline of heraldry soon after this period; for not only did the great increase of armorial bearings irrecoverably impair the respect once paid to them, but, the more particular cause to which we may assign its declension, was the total change which took place in the character and manners of this kingdom.

In the reign of Elizabeth, the pageantries of chivalry were very common, and tournaments were often held; though, in this and the preceding reigns, Italian modes had introduced many variations from their former manner of celebration. The impress and motto were now much in use; "the former consisting of an emblem characteristic of the bearer, and its meaning explained by a sentence, which, to render it still more mysterious, was sometimes imperfect." Funeral pomp, and the ceremonies regulated by the laws of the court of chivalry, were still attended to. The martial spirit of Henry, Prince of Wales, was the cause of renewing the former splendour of chivalrous exercises, and again bringing into regard the customs belonging to them. The same spirit was imbibed by his brother Charles I. when Duke of York: and, after his accession to the throne, he patronised the same customs. During the happier part of his reign, the college of arms rose into much esteem; particular attention was paid by the gentry to provincial visitations, and the entry of funeral certificates; and heralds were employed on every customary occasion. After dissension and popular discontent began to rage, among the grievances complained of, was the court of chivalry. A bill was brought forward by Mr. Hyde, afterwards Lord Chancellor Clarendon, proposing the abolition of it; upon which the matter was referred to a committee, and a day appointed to receive all petitions concerning the heralds' court, and the earl marshal's court, and on which the heralds were to prove their claims to certain privileges. With the abolition of this court, heraldry was too much connected, not to be involved; but, after the hostile parties in the state had taken the field against each other, armorial ensigns made a particular display, especially in the royal camp; there the heralds, who had accompanied their master, performed all the functions which belonged to their office, and declarations of treason, parleys, and capitulations, were made by them only. The royal cause was likewise espoused by the principal of the nobility and gentry, who held the republican party in the highest contempt, as composed of the meanest of the people; the ensigns, therefore, of their honourable antiquity, were displayed on every occasion. This, exciting envy in those who had attached themselves to the opposite party, caused every proof of family and connexions of which they could boast, to be displayed: even the banners of Cromwell, after he had gained the supreme command of the army, exhibited his paternal bearings, amplified with numerous quarterings; and, after he assumed the protectorship, the national ensigns constantly displayed his arms inserted in the centre.

At the restoration of Charles II. the heralds, who had been driven from their situations during the Commonwealth, were recalled, and reinstated in all their former offices and privileges. The patronage which they had in former times enjoyed, was again bestowed on them; and the former systems of magnificence seemed to be re-establishing. In the reign of James II. heraldry was much attended to, and visitations were still made; the last of which took place in 1683, to record the pedigrees and arms of families; to correct abuses in regard to assumption of arms; and to extend and grant to such families as possessed not armorial ensigns, a proper bearing. After the restoration, an attempt was made to re-establish the court of chivalry; to effect this, the ingenious Dr. Plott was employed to collect and arrange all the existing evidences of the history and privilege of the curia militaris. It is very remarkable, that there are on record, very few cases which have been decided in that court; and those but summary views, taken rather from private notices, or memoranda, made by the practitioners in the college of arms, than official records: ten cases are collected as precedents, and subjoined by Mr. Dallaway to his valuable work. The necessity for such a court, however, no longer subsisted; instituted in, and formed to suit, rude and warlike times, it, of course, was not suited to those later ages, when the character and customs of the people had undergone an entire change. The effort to establish it once more, was therefore ineffectual: for the last cause, the only one which, for a long interval, came under its cognizance, was in 1720, and was a trial between Blount and Blunt, concerning right of bearing arms.

As the power of the earl marshal's court was now virtually abolished, there being no constable of England appointed, it likewise put a stop to all visitations, as the officers of arms could no longer maintain their authority, enforce their commands, nor punish delinquents. The office of earl marshal, however, is still continued, as is the heralds' college and its officers, through whom arms are granted or awarded by the king's command, and all the duties performed which appertain to their office. In the succeeding section it shall be our business, for the further information of our readers, to give the origin of their functions, enlist the individuals who have held the marshalsy, and give a compendious account of the titles and duties of the different heralds that have been appointed in England.

When commerce spread sources of wealth to the industrious, and caused a greater equality to pervade the ranks of society, military aggrandizement not being held in so much estimation, and the customs of chivalry thereupon declining, heraldry degenerated from the honourable and circumscribed station, and magnificent splendour, in which the feudal system had established it. But instead of this event causing it gradually to be abolished, we find it then more generally used, and its badges sought after as the emblems of honour. This, producing a constant assumption, greatly extended the use of arms, till we find that, from the universality of the adoption, the regard in which they were held was much impaired: this the learned Selden, two centuries ago, acknowledged was the case. The intercourse of kingdoms causes their customs to assimilate; so that we find every variation that has taken place, alike progressive in the French and British heraldry. If, in any part of these dominions, it has been in a general way more correctly adhered to, than in others, it is in Scotland, where they generally possess more evidence to claim the right of assumption, and are more particular in differencing the family bearing. In Ireland, perhaps, it has flourished less; but there, heraldic ensigns have always been held in high estimation; and heralds have been empowered to grant them in that kingdom.

SECTION IV.

AMONG the great officers attendant upon the court of our ancient kings, as established by William the Conqueror, upon the plan of his ducal court of Normandy, were the constable and marshal. In the early centuries, most of the proceedings of the curia militaris were carried on by those officers; and when the former office became virtually, though not actually, abolished, authority was invested in the latter, to preside in the court of chivalry, and to summon the heralds to assist him, by conducting all processes of which that court had cognizance. As before this the two offices were generally executed in conjunction, with respect to military affairs, and are much blended together, it will be necessary to take a cursory view of their original appointments, and thence pursue their progress.

The first institution of the office of constable has been traced to the Romans; among whom, whilst kings held the sway, that officer was termed tribunis militum, and magi- ster equitum; but, under the emperors, these names were changed into that of præfectus pratorius. After the seat of empire was removed from Rome to Byzantium, amongst the alterations of the names of offices which then took place, it was again altered to comes stabuli, as this officer had then the charge of the military, which consisted mostly of horse. The French, in the very early times of their monarchy, had their comes stabuli; at first, however, the dignity and power belonging to this office fell far short of that enjoyed by those who held it in the eastern and western hemispheres; but under Philip I. the power was extended, and afterwards continued increasing, till the authority of the constable in France was almost unbounded, being esteemed second to the king, and having the custody regalis gludii, in the same manner as the præfectus pratorius had of old. It is generally supposed, that the title of constable was unknown in this island till the Norman Conquest, soon after which, that office was primarily introduced hither from Normandy, and bestowed by William the Conqueror on Ralf de Mortimer, whom he appointed his first constable of England. After whom Walter de Gloucester was constituted constable of England in fee, by Henry I. Milo, his son, next succeeded to that office, and was also created Earl of Hereford, by King Stephen; and after him his five sons held it successively, each dying without issue. Humphry de Bohun next succeeded to the constabulary of England, and the earldom of Hereford, in right of his wife Margery, eldest daughter of the before-mentioned Milo; and it remained with the male branch of this family till the decease of Humphry de Bohun, Earl of Hereford and Essex, and of Northampton, and constable of England, on the 12th of February, in the 46th year of Edward III. Thomas, surnamed of Woodstock, sixth son of Edward III. succeeded to the earldoms of Essex and Northampton, in right of his wife, Eleanor, eldest daughter of the last-mentioned earl; and was constituted constable of England during pleasure, by patent, dated 10th of June, in the 50th year of Edward III. Henry, grandson of Humphry, Earl of Stafford, who was afterwards advanced to the title of Duke of Buckingham, 23rd of Henry VI. and son of Humphry, who was son to Anna Plantagenet, daughter of the before-mentioned Thomas of Woodstock, was advanced to the high and great office of constable of England, on the 15th of July, 1st of Richard III. He was succeeded by his own son Edward Stafford, in the constabulary of England, and in all his lands and honours; but being accused of high treason, an act was passed for his attainder by parliament; and thereby the office of constable of England fell into the hands of the crown. Since that time, no person hath been appointed thereto, except upon coronations and other great solemnities; and then only for a short and limited space of time.

Whilst the comes stabuli remained a mere officer of the king's household, the marescalli were altogether subservient to them; but when the military dignity of commander-in-chief of the army was annexed to the office of the former, it proved highly advantageous for opening a way for the elevation of the latter. These being better acquainted with whatever related to the cavalry, its powers and appointments, than any other of the servants of the prince, the comes stabuli selected from among them, one, on whose abilities and understanding he could rely, and employed him to reconnoitre the position, and watch the motions of the enemy; to mark out the proper places for the encampment of the army; to assign the quarters and lodging for the soldiery; to station the piquets, and direct the foragers. The office of marscallus, thus raised from servility, soon grew up to great power and dignity; insomuch, that leading the van of the army, the command of the cavalry, and making the first attack on the enemy, were attached thereto.

The marscallus, or marschal of France, was also early instituted: he was considered as distant from the constable, and yet subordinate to him, whose minister he was, both in war and peace. His authority was great, and in many respects equal to that of his principal. In Normandy, likewise, this officer was vested both with authority and jurisdiction; and previous to Duke William's invasion of England, had arrived at the meridian of his power. It is therefore probable, that at the time of the Conquest, the name and office were both introduced into England: the arguments and evidence for its pre-existence here, are unsatisfactory and contradictory.

From the first establishment of this officer in England, he has been of great dignity and authority, both in war and peace. His institution is of the king alone, who creates him by letters patent under the great seal. The titles of master marshal, king's marshal, marshal of England, and earl marshal, have been used at various times; but it is difficult to ascertain the respective periods, when he acquired these styles, especially the two last. Marshal of England, however, appears from a charter grant of the Abbey of Tinternes, to have been used as his style, by William Marshal, second Earl of Pembroke, in the 7th year of Henry III. The earliest patent by which the appellation of earl was added to marshal of England, is that of the 12th of January, in the 9th year of Richard II. granted to Thomas Mowbray, Earl of Nottingham, and constituting him EARL Marshal of England, to hold to him and the heirs male of his body. It was also directed in this earl's patent of creation, that the plain rod, which originally was the badge of distinction of the marshal, and which he constantly bore whilst on duty, should be changed for a rod of gold, tipped at each end with black enamel, and to have the royal arms depicted on the upper end, and the arms of the said earl on the lower; since which time, the earl marshals have borne the like official badge.

The duties attached to the offices of constable and marshal, in this kingdom, as well in war as in peace, were multifarious, honourable, and confidential; and the powers, privileges, and authority of those officers, were extensive, judicial, executive, and respectable. Their powers and functions, when acting in their military capacities, were, in some instances, concurrent; in others, separate and independent. Again, in some particular branches of office, the marshal acted as the coadjutor and assistant to the constable; though in others, he was subservient and ministerial to him. The functions of the constable, when considered in his civil capacity only, were few, and very much confined to certain personal attendances on the king, in his court, on high festivals, and when such affairs were transacted, as required pomp and solemnity: whereas those of the marshal were much more numerous and diffusive; they extended to the care, management, and superintendency of the place of the royal residence, and of the household; and his jurisdiction extended twelve miles beyond the verge of the court. Formerly, both of these officers performed certain functions in the exchequer, and the marshal had also to officiate in the courts of king's bench, common pleas, &c.: thus, their personal duties becoming too extensive, it was necessary to appoint deputies; and from this custom, we possess numerous minor officers of the same titles; but we consider it unnecessary to take any further notice of them.

The first marshals that were appointed in England, were Roger de Montgomery, and William Fitz-Osborn. The many great services which these individuals performed for William, Duke of Normandy, and the advice and aid which they afforded in the Conquest of England, were rewarded by the Conqueror, not only with a rich grant of lands, but also with great preferments. Montgomery was advanced to the earldoms of Arundel, Chichester, and Surrey; and Fitz-Osborn, to the dignity of Earl of Hereford; and, at the same time, they were constituted first marshals of this kingdom. The former of these died in the year 1094; the latter was slain in the year 1070, whilst assisting Ernulph, Earl of Henault, to obtain possession of the earldom of Flanders.

From a defect in our ancient historians, the successors to the marshalship of England cannot be certainly decided. Hugo Grantemesneil, Gulielmus filius Gulielmi, or Fitz-William, Robert Fitz-Ede, a natural son of Henry I. and Walter Giffard, Earl of Buckingham, have been severally named as the successors, by various writers. Probability, however, decides in favour of the last-mentioned family; and it is suggested, that, if not the first, yet the second Walter, Earl of Buckingham, was, on the death of Roger de Montgomery, promoted to the marshalship of England; but, that on account of his treason, in taking part with the Empress Maud, it was seized into the king's hands, and by him immediately granted in fee to his favourite, Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Pembroke. The last mentioned earl has always been considered as having been hereditary marshal of England; he died in 1148, and was succeeded in his office by his son Richard de Clare, who, dying in 1176, or the following year, left issue only one daughter, Isabella, who afterwards married William Marshal, who with her obtained the earldom of Pembroke and office of marshal of England, from Richard I. before his coronation. The earl dying in 1219, was succeeded in the title, and in the office of marshal, by his eldest son, William, who married Alienore, sister to Henry III. and died without issue, in 1231, being succeeded by his brother Richard, as Earl of Pembroke, and marshal of England. This Richard dying in 1233 without issue, the office of marshal of England descended to his next brother, Gilbert Marshal, who was killed by accident in 1241, and, dying without issue, was succeeded by Walter, his next brother, as Earl of Pembroke, and marshal; but he also dying without issue, in 1246, was succeeded by his brother Anselm, in his titles and office; which he held but a short period, dying in the year following, also without issue. Thus the five sons of the first William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke, having all died without issue, the earldom became extinct, but the office of marshal of England then descended to their five sisters and co heirs.

Maud, the eldest, married, first, Hugh Bigod, the fourth Earl of Norfolk of that name, by whom she had issue three sons; Roger, who succeeded as Earl of Norfolk, and Hugh and Ralph, who died without issue. She married, secondly, William, Earl Warren and of Surrey, who died in the year 1240, and by whom she had issue, John, who succeeded his father in the earldom of Surrey, and Isabel, married to Hugh de Albini, Earl of Arundel.

Upon the death of Earl Anselm, each of his five sisters contended for the office of marshal, which was at length allotted to the eldest, Maud, Countess of Warren and Norfolk, who appointed her son, Roger Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, to execute the office; which he performed until the death of his mother in 1248, when he became marshal of England in his own right. In the 54th of Henry III. he nominated his nephew, Roger Bigod, to be his deputy as marshal, and dying the same year without issue, this Roger Bigod, (who was the eldest of the two sons of Hugh Bigod, Justicier of England, the second son of Hugh Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, by Maud, daughter of the first William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke,) succeeded his uncle as Earl of Norfolk, and as marshal of England, his father having died the preceding year. Having no issue, he granted and yielded up to the king, by a formal surrender in writing, bearing date the 12th day of April, 1301, at St. John's Abbey, in Colchester, nearly the whole of his vast possessions in England and Wales; and also surrendered and yielded up to the king all his right to the honour and title which he had to the name and the earldom of Norfolk, as well as the marshalship of England; and in token thereof, he delivered up his marshal's rod, upon condition that the same should be restored to him, in case he should have any children; and that he should have a thousand pounds from the king in present, and a thousand pounds per annum during his life. Immediately after this surrender, the king granted the earldom of Norfolk unto the said Roger Bigod, and the heirs of his body, together with the marshalship of England; and further re-granted unto the said Roger and Alice his wife, and the issue of their two bodies lawfully begotten, the several lands and manors, which the earl had conveyed and yielded up to the king, as is before mentioned; but in default of such issue, the same to revert to the king and his heirs. The earl died without issue in 1297, and the office of marshal, in consequence of the before-mentioned surrender, reverted to the crown.

Robert de Clifford was, on the 3rd of September, 1307, appointed marshal of England, during the king's pleasure; but it is probable, that he was so constituted for the sole purpose of performing the duties of the office, at the coronation of the new king; for, in the same year, Nicholas de Segrave was elevated to that office, to hold the same during pleasure. How long he held it is uncertain; but it is supposed that he enjoyed it till the 9th Edward II. and then resigned it in favour of Thomas de Brotherton.

Thomas de Brotherton, who was fifth son of Edward I. by Queen Margaret, his second wife, was constituted marshal of England, 10th of February, in the ninth year of Edward II. to hold to him and the heirs male of his body, lawfully begotten. This Thomas was, also, on the 16th of December, 6th of Edward II. being then only thirteen years of age, created Earl of Norfolk; and at that same time obtained a grant of all the possessions of Roger Bigod, theretofore Earl of Norfolk. This earl dying in the 12th year of Edward III. without issue male, the office of marshal of England again reverted to the crown.

William de Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, was, on the 15th of September, 1339, in consideration of his signal services to the crown, constituted marshal of England for life; he died in the year 1344, in consequence of some bruises he received at a tilt. After his death, a commission was issued by Edward III. bearing date the 31st of January, in the eighteenth year of his reign, directed to Robert de Herle, Thomas de Sibethorpe, John de Hounton, and Richard de Stonely, commanding them to seize into the king's hands the office of marshal of England, with its appurtenances, &c. Whether this was fully executed, is unknown; that commission, however, was superseded on the eighth of July, then next, by the letters patent, granting it to Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick. This nobleman was one of the first knights of the Garter, at the institution of that order, and privy counsellor to Edward III.; he was constituted marshal of England in the eighteenth year of that king. In 1350, being engaged in the wars of France, he, upon some particular occasion, not specified by his historian, John Rous, relinquished the office of marshal, in favour of Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, who thereupon was, by patent, appointed marshal of England, durante bene placito; but, dying in the same year, the before-mentioned Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, was again constituted marshal of England, during pleasure, in the 40th of Edward III. He died three years afterwards, when Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March and Ulster, was constituted marshal of England; but in the 50th year of Edward III. being sent into France, in order to protect Calais and its environs, he surrendered the office into the king's hands; whereupon, Henry Percy, then commonly called Hotspur, was constituted marshal of England. He executed the duties of this office at the coronation of Richard II. and was thereupon created Earl of Northumberland. Soon after this he resigned the marshal's rod; whereupon John Fitz-Allan, Lord Maltravers, second son of Richard, Earl of Arundel, was constituted marshal of England; but was soon after wrecked during his passage to Brittany, on St. Nicholas's day, in the third year of the reign of Richard II.

Thomas de Holland, Earl of Kent, half-brother of Richard II. was then advanced to the dignity of marshal of England, during pleasure; but the young king dismissed him from that office, in the ninth year of his reign, and conferred the honour, for life, upon Thomas de Mowbray, Earl of Nottingham, grandson of Margaret, the eldest daughter and co-heir of Thomas de Brotherton, before-mentioned. This earl, having shortly afterwards married Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Fitz-Allan, Earl of Arundel, obtained a further grant of the office, together with the then new and additional title of EARL MARSHAL, to hold to him and the heirs male of his body. And further, by patent, dated 5th of February, 20th Richard II. and granted in full parliament, not only confirmed to him, and the heirs male of his body, the office, title, and honour of earl marshal of England, together with all the fees, dues, and profits thereto belonging; together with the union thereunto of the offices of marshal in the king's bench, marshal in the exchequer, marshal-crier before the steward, and marshal of the household; but, also, further granted and ordained that the earl, and the heirs male of his body, earl marshals of England, should, by reason of such their office, bear a golden truncheon, or rod, as described before, instead of the baton of wood which the marshals of England had been accustomed to carry in their hands. In the year following, some of the nobility, who were the earl's enemies, caused him to be arrested, and indicted for high treason, at Nottingham, purposing to accuse him thereof in the next parliament: whereupon the earl, in order to reinstate himself in the king's confidence, joined with the Duke of Lancaster, the Earl of Kent, and others, in accusing, and bringing to the scaffold, his own father-in-law, the innocent Richard, Earl of Arundel. Soon after which, he was employed by the king to procure his uncle, Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester, to be privately murdered; which he accordingly effected at Calais. In reward for this execrable conduct, the king, on the 28th of September following, granted to him, and the heirs male of his body, all the possessions which came to the king's hands by reason of the then late forfeitures of Richard, Earl of Arundel, and Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick; and on the next day created him Duke of Norfolk; at the same time advancing his grandmother, Margaret, daughter of Thomas de Brotherton, to the title of Duchess of Norfolk. Henry of Bolingbroke, Duke of Hereford, in the ensuing year, having accused him of speaking disgraceful words of the king, challenged him to single combat; which being accepted, the king appointed the duel to be fought in his presence, on Gosfield-green, near Coventry: but as soon as the combatants had entered the lists, the king forbade the combat, and banished the Duke of Hereford for ten years, and the Duke of Norfolk for life; which mandate was confirmed by an ordinance made in the ensuing parliament held at Coventry. In obedience to this ordinance, the Duke of Norfolk quitted England in the month of October following, and died at Venice in September, 1399.

On occasion of the above-mentioned appeal and combat, Thomas Holland, Earl of Kent, then lately created Duke of Surrey, having been appointed to supply the earl marshal's office, he was, on the 30th of January following, constituted marshal of England, during pleasure; but being, on the 26th of July, in the succeeding year, made lieutenant of Ireland, John de Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, was appointed marshal of England, during the Duke of Surrey's residence in Ireland; where he continued, till Richard, being in Ireland, attended by the Earl of Salisbury, received the news of the Duke of Lancaster being lauded in England. Upon the king's return to England, he was accompanied by the Duke of Surrey and the Earl of Salisbury, who were also present when he resigned his crown. Henry the IV. soon caused Surrey to be deprived of his dukedom; after which, he being joined by the Earl of Salisbury, they attempted to release and restore their royal master, Richard; but being taken prisoners, they were beheaded at Cirencester, in Gloucestershire.

Thomas Mowbray, eldest son of the banished Duke of Norfolk, never had the title of duke, but constantly enjoyed that of earl marshal; and yet it is certain that he never exercised the office; for Ralph Nevil, created Earl of Westmoreland by King Richard II. was, by King Henry IV. immediately after his attainment of the crown, constituted earl marshal of England.

But, as the Duke of Norfolk had neither been attainted, nor done any act whereby to incur a forfeiture of the office of earl marshal of England, which office, by his patent, stood limited to him for life, with the remainder to the issue male of his body, it might have been properly claimed by the duke's son; but about this time, he having taken part in an insurrection, was made prisoner, and, soon after, in the twentieth year of his age, beheaded at York: upon this, John Mowbray, second son of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, took the titles of Earl of Nottingham, and earl marshal of England; but, being then a minor, John Holland, Earl of Huntingdon, afterwards created Duke of Exeter, obtained a grant of the office of earl marshal of England, to hold during the time of his minority.

John Mowbray, Earl of Nottingham, making proof of his age, in the 14th year of Henry VI. had restitution of the earl marshal's office, and was restored to the title and dignity of Duke of Norfolk. He died 19th of October, 1433, leaving issue John Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, and earl marshal of England; who dying in 1460, was succeeded by his son John Mowbray, the Earl Warren and Surrey, (being so created in his father's life time, on the 24th of March, 29th Henry VI.) as Duke of Norfolk, and earl marshal of England. He died in the 15th year of Edward IV. leaving an only daughter, Anne, married to Richard, Duke of York, second son of King Edward IV. and, in right of his wife, earl marshal of England; but both dying without issue, the office of earl marshal once more reverted to the crown.

John, Lord Howard, son of Robert, Lord Howard, by his wife Margaret, one of the two daughters of Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, was, by Richard III. on the 28th of June, in the first year of his reign, constituted earl marshal of England, and at the same time advanced to the dignity of Duke of Norfolk. He was slain in Bosworthfield, and was afterwards attainted in the first parliament of Henry VII.

William Berkley, earl of Nottingham, son of James, Lord Berkley, by his wife, Elizabeth, the other daughter of Thomas Mowbray, the first Duke of Norfolk, was, by Henry VII. soon after he obtained the crown, constituted earl marshal of England, to hold to himself for life, with remainder to the heirs male of his body. He was advanced to the dignity of Marquess of Berkley, and died in 1491, without issue. Henry, Duke of York, was then constituted earl marshal of England, by his father Henry VII.

Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey, was constituted earl marshal of England for life, by Henry VIII. in the second year of his reign. He was the only son and heir of the last-mentioned John, Duke of Norfolk; and had been created Earl of Surrey, by Richard III. on the same day that his father was advanced to the dignity of duke. He fought valiantly at the battle of Bosworth, on the part of Richard, where, being wounded and taken prisoner, he was committed to the Tower of London. Three years afterwards, he obtained his liberty; and was restored by parliament, in the 4th year of Henry VII. to his title of Earl of Surrey. Soon after this, he was advanced to several high offices; and, in 1513, Henry VIII. going into France, he was sent, with considerable forces, into the northern parts of England, to protect them from invasion by the Scots. Finding them encamped on Floddenhill, near Cheviot, he attacked and entirely defeated them; their king, James IV. being killed during the engagement, by the shot of an arrow. For this important service, King Henry granted to the earl, and the heirs male of his body, the augmentation to his arms which is placed on the bend, and advanced him to the dignity of Duke of Norfolk. He died on the 25th May, 1524.

Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, was then constituted earl marshal of England for life; but resigned that office in the 25th year of Henry VIII.; whereupon Thomas Howard, third Duke of Norfolk, son of the last-mentioned Duke of Norfolk, who died in 1524, was constituted earl marshal of England by patent, bearing date 28th May, 1533. He was attainted in 1546, with his son Henry, Earl of Surrey, who was beheaded; but the duke escaped, in consequence of the death of the king, which happened within eight days after the passing of the act for his attainder.

Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, was, on the 7th of February, 1547, constituted earl marshal of England for life; but being deprived of the office in the 5th year of Edward VI. John Dudley, Earl of Warwick, was, on the 20th of April, 1551, appointed earl marshal of England, and, on the 11th of October following, advanced to the dignity of Duke of Northumberland; but was beheaded on the 22nd of August following, being convicted of high treason.

Thomas Howard, eldest son of the before-mentioned Henry, Earl of Surrey, who was beheaded during the reign of Henry VIII. was, in the first year of Queen Mary's reign, fully restored in blood, the act for the attainder of the duke, his grandfather, being then made void, and he became earl marshal of England. In 1572, this Duke of Norfolk was attainted for high treason, and on the 2nd of June, in that year, beheaded on Tower Hill; whereupon, George Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, was constituted earl marshal of England.

After the death of the Earl of Shrewsbury, which took place on the 18th of November, 1590, the office of earl marshal of England continued vacant till the year 1592, when it was put in commission to William Lord Burleigh, lord high treasurer; Charles, Lord Howard of Effingham, lord high admiral; and Henry, Lord Hunsdon, lord chamberlain of the household; who continued to execute the office until the 28th December, 1597, when Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex, was advanced to the office of earl marshal of England. In the 41st of Elizabeth, he was suspended from that office, and all the other employments he held under the crown; and shortly after was beheaded; whereupon, the queen granted a commission to Thomas, Lord Buckhurst; Charles, Earl of Nottingham, lord high admiral; and Edward, Earl of Worcester, master of the horse, for the execution of the office of earl marshal of England; which office they retained till the queen's death.

Upon the accession of James to the throne, Edward, Earl of Worcester, was constituted earl marshal of England, for the day of his coronation; which being over, the king appointed Lodowick, Duke of Lenox, and the Earls of Dorset, Nottingham, Suffolk, Devonshire, and Northampton, to be joint commissioners with the Earl of Worcester, for executing the office.

In the beginning of the year 1621, the office of earl marshal of England was again commissioned to Edward, Earl of Worcester, then lord privy seal; Lodowick, Duke of Lenox, lord steward of the household; George, Marquess of Buckingham, lord high admiral; and Thomas, Earl of Arundel and Surrey; but they executed it but a very short time: for Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel and Surrey, was, on the 29th of August following, constituted earl marshal of England for life. He was also advanced to the title of Earl of Norfolk, by letters patent, in the 20th year of Charles I.; but died on the 4th of October, 1646.

James Howard, Earl of Suffolk, executed the office of earl marshal of England, at the coronation of Charles II.

Henry Howard, Baron Howard of Castle Rising, and Earl of Norwich, was, by letters patent, dated 19th of October, 1672, constituted hereditary earl marshal of England, with limitation, in default of issue male, to the heirs male of his grandfather, the last-mentioned Thomas, Earl of Arundel, &c. with remainder to the late Earl of Suffolk and his heirs male, remainder to Charles Howard, Earl of Nottingham, and his heirs male. On the death of his elder brother Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, Earl of Arundel, Surrey, &c. which happened in the year 1677, he succeeded to the dukedom and all the other honours and estates; and died on the 11th of January, 1683. He had issue two sons; first, Henry Howard, who on the 27th of January, 1683, was summoned to parliament as Baron Mowbray; secondly, Thomas Howard, lord of the manor of Worksop, in the county of Nottingham; and also three daughters.

Henry Howard, Baron Mowbray, succeeded his father as Duke of Norfolk, and hereditary earl marshal of England. He died on the 2nd of April, 1701, without issue; and was succeeded by Thomas Howard, eldest son of the before-mentioned Thomas Howard, lord of the manor of Worksop, as Duke of Norfolk, &c. and as hereditary earl marshal of England. He died without issue, on the 23rd of December, 1732; when Edward Howard, third son of Thomas Howard, lord of the manor of Worksop, succeeded him as Duke of Norfolk, &c. and hereditary earl marshal of England. This duke also dying without issue, on the 20th of September, 1777, was succeeded by Charles Howard, tenth Duke of Norfolk, and hereditary earl marshal of England, grandson of Charles, son of Henry-Frederick, Earl of Arundel, in the reign of Charles I. His grace, dying in 1786, was succeeded by his only son, Charles Howard, eleventh Duke of Norfolk, and hereditary earl marshal of England; who, dying without issue in December, 1815, was succeeded by Bernard Edward Howard, Esq. (descended from Bernard Howard, Esq. brother of Thomas and Henry, fifth and sixth Dukes of Norfolk, and Charles Howard, the great grandfather of the last Duke) who is now 12th Duke of Norfolk, &c. and hereditary earl marshal of England, 1828.

The constable and marshal, for the better and more effectual discharge of their respective military and ceremonial functions, had under them certain ministers, distinguished by the general title of heralds, and who executed the commands of the sovereign, and of these two great officers.

There have been a great variety of statements and opinions concerning the origin and institution of this office; there is no doubt, however, that it is of great antiquity; as, according to the generality of the most approved writers, the word herald signifies a messenger of war and peace, in some respects such as the feciales of the Romans were. Sir John Ferne traces the origin of this office as such, to the reign of Priam, King of Troy; others trace it to Scripture History, and deduce the instance, related in Daniel iii. 4, of a herald proclaiming the king's will and pleasure. But, passing over these statements, and also those concerning the history of the herukes among the Greeks, and the feciales among the Romans, we will take a more modern view of their origin, and connexion with their present functions.

Among the different nations of Europe, by whom heralds have been employed, many have claimed the honour of their primary institution. That they have been generally adopted in imitation of each other, we may suppose from the apparent similarity in the title; which, in French, is herault, heraut, and heraud; in Italian, araldo; in Spanish, heraldo, or farante; in Danish, herold; in Dutch, heraut; in German, heerolde; and in barbarous Latin, heraldus, heraldus, heroldus, heraldus, herodes, heronaldus, &c. In attempting to give the etymology of this word, authors have searched several of these languages; in some of which they have supposed they have found the root; whilst others have compounded it of two words; as Verstegan, who says it is derived from here, an army, and healt, a champion, as the army's champion, whose especial charge was to challenge to battle or combat. There are many authors, who give it as their opinion, that this word is of German or Teutonic extraction, and that it is derived from the word here; but that word having a multiplicity of significations attached to it in the German language, we find it differently interpreted; some writers informing us, that it imports, not only the army itself, but arms also, and likewise a lord or master. Thus we find some interpret it, by supposing it to be written here, lord; and alt, old; which also agrees with Upton's definition, who says they were veterani, old soldiers of fame. Again, it is given as the opinion of a judicious writer, that it may be derived from the German word here, an army, and the old Teutonic word halden, halten, or holden; in Saxon, healden or gehealden; in Islandic, halda; which signifies to hold any office, charge, or employment.

To ascertain the precise time when these officers were first instituted, it will be necessary to take a view of the several duties assigned to them, and more particularly of the purposes for which they seem to have been originally established.

We learn from Bertrand Caprioli and others, that, anciently it was customary for the emperors to take under their immediate care and protection, such of their best, most experienced, and valiant soldiers of gentilitial birth, that had been wounded or maimed in the wars, and to maintain them; that these were distinguished by the appellation of veterani or veterans; that they were had in great esteem; and that the undertaking and prosecution of sieges and engagements, and the conduct of all other military affairs, were carried on by their advice, and under their direction. On this account, their services became necessary; and they were further employed by the emperors to carry messages, and negotiate or settle disputes with hostile parties. Acting in this character with secrecy and honour, they established their reputation, and were generally received and dismissed by kings and princes with safety, civility, and esteem. The institution of tournaments and jousts opened a new field for the employment of the veterans; for it became their business to regulate and conduct those exercises; which they were well enabled to do, not only from their military skill, but, being themselves of noble blood, they were generally acquainted with the families of the nobility and gentry, and were therefore better capable to judge whether the applicants were admissible within the lists. About the same time, armories became common, and were borne as gentilitial marks of distinction, on the banners, surcoats, and shields of the noble and knightly; they were hung up at the entrance of the lists as a criterion of the gentility of the owner; and, before they were permitted to tourney, a certificate thereof from the veterans being necessary, they were obliged to make themselves acquainted with the devices each family had assumed, and to prevent the confusion which might arise from bearing them improperly. The same officers were found very useful during the crusades, being employed in keeping up a constant intercourse between the different armies. It is probable, that the benefit of assuming some badge of distinction, which should so evidence itself, that they might be known at sight, and thus be protected, conducted safe through the different armies, admitted to audience, and credited; and as each prince had then his peculiar symbol and armorial ensign, what could be more obvious than the investing the messenger with the like coat of arms as his prince bore, which would effectually answer all the above-mentioned purposes. Being thus empowered, they would become particularly acquainted with the ensigns throughout the host. It is also probable, that they would then be styled heralds; though how this term came to be used, cannot now be discovered. Certain it is, that soon after this time, the word heraldus occurs in the imperial constitutions of Frederick Ænobarbus, and that they provided for the safe passports and inviolable security of such officers. After their return from the expeditions to the Holy Land, the benefits arising from such attendants would be so evident to the princes, that they would retain this manner of intercourse, and extend their employments.

It would be difficult to fix the precise time, in which the office of heralds, under that, or any other appellation, was first introduced into England; as little or no information is furnished by our ancient historians, concerning that subject. The oldest public monuments, which have been discovered, wherein English heralds are mentioned, are some made in the reign of Edward III.; and yet that they were previously established is satisfactorily proved. Sir Henry Spelman favours us with an acquittance, given by Peter to John de Herberia, which was dated in the 4th year of Edward I. viz. Rex Hyraudorum citra aquam de Trent ex parte Boreale. And they are again mentioned in a statute, called the statute of arms, which was made in the same reign, and ordains that no king of heralds, nor those that are subordinate to him, shall wear any armour, except a sword without point; and that kings of heralds should have only their houces des armes, i. e. their tabards. From these proofs, we gather, not only that England had then its heralds, but that they were, even then, divided into classes. Some authors have supposed, that the Saxon monarchs and their nobility had their heralds; but this conjecture is generally rejected as unfounded. The Normans, at the time of their invasion of this country, seem not to have had that office then introduced among them, as neither William nor his two sons made use of such officers. Probability favours the reign of Henry II.; as that prince, through his intercourse with France; Germany, &c. where those officers had been established for a length of time, must have been acquainted with their establishment, services, and importance; so that we may suppose they were then first introduced here, and thenceforward arrived at that state and condition, in which we find them in the reign of Edward I.

Being, from the time of their first introduction into this kingdom, the immediate and subordinate ministers of the marshal and constable, they assisted in the management and conduct of the several branches of duty within the department of these two great officers. Hence it was, that they had the cognizance, inspection, marshalling, and regulation of coat armour, and the several marks of distinction relative to it; that they received all foreign nobility and others coming to England, to exercise at tournaments, and gave safe conduct to such, from the time of their arrival till their departure; that they assisted at all military feats; and that they had a very considerable charge and interference in the order and progress of legal combat. It was also from the same source that they derived the employment of marshalling and conducting coronations, marriages, baptisms, funerals, interviews, and those other august assemblies, processions, pomps, and solemnities, wherein the splendour and magnificence of our ancient monarchs principally consisted.

The estimation in which these officers were held, appears, not only from the various functions assigned to them, but also from the ceremonies which attended their creations; which were by the sovereign himself, or by special commission from him; and, according to Gerard Leigh, were after the following manner: "The king asked the person to be so created, whether he were a gentleman of blood or of second coat armour; if he was not, the king gave him lands and fees, and assigned him and his heirs proper arms. Then, as the messenger was brought in by the herald of the province, so the pursuivant was brought in by the eldest herald, who, at the prince's command, performed all the ceremonies, as turning the coat of arms, setting the manacles thereof on the arms of the pursuivant, and putting about his neck a collar of SS; and when he was named, the prince himself took the cup from the herald, which was gilt, and poured the water and wine upon the head of the pursuivant, creating him by the name of our herald; and the king, after the oath was administered, gave the same cup to the new herald." At their creation, they were likewise invested with a surcoat of their sovereign's arms; which they were commanded constantly to wear, whilst in execution of any branch of their duty.

For a great length of time, these officers have been divided into three classes or degrees, viz. Kings, Heralds, and Pursuivants of Arms. The generally received opinion concerning the title of king of arms, is, that it was given to that person who was the chief or principal officer presiding over the heralds of any kingdom; and that it owes its rise to the French. The present number of the kings of arms is three; the first, or chief of them, is titled Garter principal king of arms; the second, Clarencieux king of arms; and the third, Norroy king of arms.

Of the first, we shall transcribe the account given by Stephen Martin Leake, Esq. who filled the office of Garter; which is as follows. "Garter was instituted by Henry V. A. D. 1417, for the service of the most noble order of the Garter; and was made sovereign, within the office of arms, over all other officers, subject to the crown of England, by the name of Garter king of arms of England. In his patent, he is stiled principal king of English arms, and principal officer of arms of the most noble order of the Garter, and has power to execute the said office himself, or by deputy being a herald. By the constitution of his office, he must be a native of England, and a gentleman bearing arms. To him belongs the correction of arms, and all ensigns of honour, usurped or borne unjustly; and also to grant arms to deserving persons, and supporters to the nobility, and the knights of the Bath; to go next before the sword in solemn proceedings, none interposing except the constable and marshal; to administer the oath to all the officers of arms; to have a habit like the register of the order, baron's service in the court, and lodgings in Windsor Castle; to bear his white rod, with a banner of the ensigns of the order thereon, before the sovereign; also, when any lord shall enter the parliament chamber, to assign him his place, according to his dignity and degree: to carry the ensigns of the order to foreign princes; and to do, or procure to be done, what the sovereign shall enjoin, relating to the order; with other duties incident to his office of principal king of arms: for the execution whereof he hath a salary of one hundred pounds a year, payable at the exchequer and an hundred pounds more out of the revenue of the order, besides fees."

The title of Clarencieux was first given, as is generally supposed, to a herald belonging to the Duke of Clarence, son to Edward III. who, having married the granddaughter of the Earl of Clare, in Suffolk, was so created by his father. Edward IV. succeeding to the dukedom of Clarence, upon the death of his brother, made the herald of the dukedom a king of arms, and so called him Clarentius or Clarencieux.

The office became obsolete in the reign of Henry VII.; but in the reign of Edward VI. Clarencieux was again one of the kings of arms, with Garter and Norroy; and these three, since that period, have continued kings of arms. The jurisdiction, or province of this officer, comprehends the south, east, and west parts of England.

Norroy, so styled from his province, which extends northward of the river Trent, is the most ancient title of these kings. We find him mentioned as early as in the 16th year of Edward II.; and in the succeeding reign, the title Norroy was appropriated to a king of heralds. Roy Norreys, likewise, occurs in the Pell Rolls of the 22nd year of Edward III.; but from that time, to the 9th year of Richard II. the title seems to have been extinct. When Edward IV. obtained the throne, the northern provinces were again placed under a king of arms, who was styled Norroy; and it has, since then, continued without interruption.

The two last are denominated provincial heralds, as they divide the kingdom between them, into provinces. By charter, they have power to visit families, to set down their pedigrees, distinguish their arms, grant arms, and, with Garter, to direct the other heralds. Anciently, they were created and solemnly crowned by the kings of England themselves; but, in later days, the earl marshal received a special commission, at every creation, to personate the king. Besides the above mentioned, there have been, at various times, and by various monarchs, kiugs of arms created; but as they have all been long extinct, it is unnecessary further to notice them.

The present number of HERALDS is six; viz. Windsor, Chester, Lancaster, Richmond, Somerset, and York: they have their titles (except Windsor, who has his denomination from the royal castle or palace) from counties and shires, which have been, at sundry times, as Sir Henry Spelman observes, the honours or appendages of the younger sons of the crown; and heralds, with most of these titles, have sometimes belonged to the sovereign, and sometimes to the nobility who had these honours. Although the titles of these officers are taken from separate places, it must not be supposed that their offices are local, or that they have any particular jurisdiction, or charge to be executed in those places only: these being only nominal, they are all of them officers at large. The office of Windsor herald was instituted 38th of Edward III. when that monarch was in France.

Chester herald is said to have been instituted in the same reign; but the records of that king's reign do not mention him; he was, however, a known and established herald, in the time of Richard II.

Lancaster herald was also instituted by Edward III. when he created his son Duke of Lancaster.

Somerset herald is supposed by some to have been first instituted in the reign of Henry VIII. when that monarch made his natural son, Henry Fitzroy, duke of that place; but it is affirmed by others, that this title was conferred in the ninth year of Henry VII.

York herald was instituted, as some say, by Edward III. in honour of his son, whom he created Duke of York; but several manuscripts expressly attribute that institution to Edward IV. Sufficient authority has not been produced for either of these assertions; and the earliest record in which this officer is mentioned, is a patent roll of the 1st year of Richard III. granting to John Water, York herald of arms, the manor of Bayhall, &c.

Richmond herald occurs in the reign of Edward IV.; in the 12th year of which, that officer was made Gwyenne king of arms.

The succession of these titles down to the present time, has been uninterrupted. Besides these, there have been numerous other heralds, who have belonged to sovereigns, princes, and nobles, whose titles were taken from territories within the realm, foreign dominions belonging to the crown, places where signal victories have been obtained, the badges of the sovereign, the titles of their lords, &c.; but as it is long since they became extinct, it is not necessary to give a list of them here.

The privileges even of the higher nobility did not, however, extend so far as to allow a nobleman personally to create, at his own will, and for his own use, a herald of arms; but when any nobleman was desirous of having a herald of his own, he was obliged to present the person whom he had chosen to his sovereign, who, consenting thereto, either personally, or by some one authorized so to do, created the person nominated a herald, in presence of the officer of arms of the crown. This ceremony being, in all respects, the same as that observed in creating the king's heralds, excepting the necessary variation of certain clauses in their oath, and their investiture with the tabard or coat of arms of their particular lord. These heralds had, thereupon, an annuity, or a sufficient maintenance, settled upon them for life.

Next in succession, and lowest in degree, follow the PURSUIVANTS OF ARMS. These were, as their name imports, which is most probably of French extraction, followers, marshals, or messengers, attendant upon the herald. As the nobility possessed heralds, so they did pursuivants, who were created by them, with great ceremony, in the following manner. One of the heralds, wearing his master's coat, leading the person to be created a pursuivant by the left hand, and holding a cupful of wine and water in his right, came into the presence of the lord and master of him who was to be created, and of whom the herald asked by what name he would have his pursuivant called; which the lord having mentioned, the herald poured part of the wine and water on his head, calling him by the name so assigned to him. The herald then took the coat of his lord, and put it over his head athwart, so that part of the coat made for his arms hung before and behind, and the longer part of it on both sides of the persons created; and in which way the pursuivant was always to wear it. This done, an oath of fidelity was administered to him, and the ceremony concluded. The appointment of heralds and pursuivants of arms by the nobility has long been discontinued, and there are now only four pursuivants belonging to the college of arms: viz.

Rouge Croix, which is the most ancient title of a pursuivant, and, doubtless, was taken from the red cross of St. George. He was instituted by Henry V. from which time it was regularly continued until April, 1644; after which it continued vacant till the restoration, when it was revived.

Blue Mantle: this officer is said to have been instituted by Henry V.; but, according to others, by Edward III. by whom he was so called, in allusion to the French coat being blue, which that monarch had assumed. The only vacancy which has occurred in the succession of this officer, was between the years 1646 and 1660.

Rouge Dragon, who was instituted by Henry VII. on the day preceding his coronation, and was so styled from the ensign of Cadwallader, from whom that king derived himself in a male line; or, according to others, from the red dragon, one of the supporters of that monarch's arms; which supporter, it is again observed, was itself assumed from Cadwallader's ensign. And Portcullis, who was likewise instituted by Henry VII. and so named from that badge or cognizance used by him.

The succession of the two last-mentioned offices has not been interrupted since their institution.

The pursuivant is a novice, or in a state of probation for future promotion. Anciently, the term of noviciature was seven years, after the expiration of which the pursuivant was eligible to the office of herald; and this institution was then so particularly attended to, that the sovereign was allowed to dispense with one year only, and that but on extraordinary occasions. In this kingdom, however, there was probably some relaxation long ago; as we find the heralds petitioned for the restoration of this ancient qualification; but, since that time, it has been determined by a judgement in Westminster Hall, that a person may lawfully be made, directly, per saltum, a herald, without ever being a pursuivant.

The tabards of the kings of arms are velvet, with the royal arms richly embroidered, over which they wear the collar of SS. with two portcullises of silver gilt; the crown with which they are crowned is a circle of gold, inscribed with part of the first verse of the 51st Psalm, Miserere mei, Deus, secundum magnum misericordiam tuam, and is surmounted with sixteen upright leaves, shaped like those of the oak; (it was formerly ornamented with fleurons, and resembled the coronets of the present dukes) within the crown is a cap of crimson scarlet, doubled with ermine, having at the top a large tuft, or tassel, wrought in gold silk. See Pl. 29, fig. 7. Anciently, they wore their crowns at the four high feasts of the year, Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, and All Saints' day, when their attendance was required near the person of their sovereign; but of late, they have only worn them at coronations. They also each wear, at a gold chain or riband, the escutcheon, or badge, of their office, by which they are distinguished.

The badge of Garter principal king of arms, is the arms of that order; viz. St. George's cross, impaling the royal arms within the Garter, under the imperial crown of Great Britain: the same on both sides. The arms of his office are, argent, St. George's cross; on a chief azure, (not gules, as given by the Rev. M. Noble and others, who have copied the error from Edmondson) a coronet within a garter of the order, between a lion of England and a fleur-de-lis, or. See Pl. 30, fig. 25.*

The badge of Clarencieux king of arms, is, on an escutcheon, crowned with a crown of the king of arms, on a green ground, argent, St. George's cross; on a chief gules, a lion of England, crowned with an open crown, having on the other side, or reverse, the royal arms crowned, upon a white ground. The arms of the office of Clarencieux are the same as on the front of his badge. See Pl. 30, fig. 26.

The badge of Norroy king of arms is, argent, St. George's cross; on a chief, per pale, azure and gules, a lion of England, crowned with an open crown, between a fleur-de-lis, in pale, and a key, or; which, likewise, are the arms of his office: in other respects his badge is like that of Clarencieux.

These arms of office the kings of arms bear in pale, with their own arms, and crowned with the crown of a king of arms, as well upon their seals as otherwise.

The heralds of arms are invested with like tabards as the kings of arms, but not so rich, being composed of satin; they likewise wear a collar of SS. by which they attain the rank of esquire, if not so before.

The tabard of the pursuivants are of damask, also embroidered with the royal arms; but they wear no collar of SS. as the heralds do; they are gentlemen by their patents, but not esquires.

The variation of customs and manners which has taken place in latter ages, has caused, in many instances, the services of the heralds not to be required, which, in former times, it was their particular duty to attend to; for example, heralds and their pursuivants were, in earlier times, the only messengers between hostile armies, in which capacity their persons were always held sacred, and their coat of office was a sufficient safeguard for them; but the use of them, as such, has long been discontinued, and their place supplied by any officer appointed for the occasion, accompanied by a drummer and trumpeter to give notice of his approach, and secure a friendly reception. We need not further enumerate the military pageants and other customs, which are now obsolete, from which they derived great profits. They, however, still receive fees upon creations of peers, baronets, and knights; they have donations for attendance at court upon the festivals of Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, All Saints', and St. George's day; fees upon installations of knights of the Garter and the Bath, royal marriages, funerals, public solemnities, &c.; with small salaries paid from the exchequer; but their ancient fees from the nobility, upon certain occasions, have been long discontinued, and their principal emolument arises from grants of arms, the tracing of genealogies, and recording the same in the register of the college of arms.

The kings, heralds, and pursuivants of arms, were first incorporated by Richard III. by charter, bearing date the 2nd of March, in the first year of his reign, by the name of Le Garter regis armorum Anglicorum, regis armorum partium Australium, regis armorum partium Borealiu, regis armorum Wallæ, et heraldorum, prosecutorum, sive pursevandorum armorum. That monarch empowered them to have and use a common seal; and granted to them and their successors, for the use of the twelve principal officers of the said corporation, a house and its appurtenances, then called Colde Arbor, (formerly Poulteney's Inn) and situated within the parish of Allhallows the less, in the city of London. It was, however, in consequence of the act of resumption, passed in the 1st year of Henry VII. seized into the king's hands, because it was supposed personally to belong to John Writhe, Garter, who then lived in it, and not to the officers of arms in their corporate capacity. The heralds, being thus deprived and destitute of a place wherein to hold their assemblies and chapters, and to keep their library, (many of the books of which had been lost and squandered away) petitioned the throne during the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII. for a grant of some house or place, wherein to assemble, but without success. In the reign of Edward VI. they also remained without any place of assembly; though, in the third year of his reign, they obtained a charter, by authority of parliament, whereby all their ancient privileges were confirmed to them; as to be free of all tax whatever, or of serving in any other public office, of what degree, nature, or condition, soever. In the reign of Philip and Mary, however, they were reincorporated by charter, bearing date the 18th of July, in the first and second years of their reign, by their former names or titles; and to the intent that they might reside together, and consult and agree among themselves, and for the depositing and secure preservation of their records, enrolments and other documents and papers, there was granted to them a message with its appurtenances, called Derby House, situated in the parish of St. Benedict and St. Peter, within the city of London, to be by them held in free burgage of the city of London. In the 10th year of the reign of Elizabeth, in order to promote the welfare and prosperity of the college of heralds, Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, then earl marshal of England, drew up and promulgated a list of orders and statutes, to be observed and kept by the officers of arms, assigning to all and each of them their proper departments and business. The advantages expected to be derived from the incorporation of the officers of arms, were, in a manner, stopped by the quarrels of the kings and heralds among themselves, in the years 1593, 1594, 1595, concerning their rights, privileges, fees, and precedence; this occasioned the house to be so much neglected, that it went to ruin; the office was discontinued, and the books belonging thereto were embezzled. Whereupon, the queen issued a commission to execute the office of earl marshal, then vacant, and authorized the persons therein with full power to call before them, from time to time, all officers of arms, and to make inquisition of their conduct. By virtue of this commission and authority, in this decayed state of the heralds' college, they deputed Sir Edward Hobby and Sir George Carew to view the then present state of the office, and to make statutes and orders for the better regulation thereof for the future; which they did, laying before them the true intent of their first charters; and, on the 28th of September, 1596, drew up a book for the reformation of the office, and presented it to the commissioners, desiring them to subscribe the same, that so it might be of force. These regulations, however, had little effect at the time; for, not only the dissensions between Garter and the provincial kings and heralds continued, but complaints were made to James I. in his second year, of the conduct of the officers of arms; against whom it was alleged, that they had committed divers errors, to the dishonour of nobility and chivalry, and to the disgrace of sundry families of ancient blood, in assigning and appointing their ancient arms, badges, and crests, to men that were strangers in blood to them, and not inheritable thereto; as likewise, that they, for the sake of gain, or some other unworthy cause, had granted to persons of base birth, such arms, crests, and badges, as ought to be borne by none but those of honourable descent. To rectify such abuses, a special commission was issued by the king, in the same year, to execute the office of earl marshal of England, and to empower the commissioners therein to make due inquisition of all matters of arms, of then late years given, by his heralds and pursuivants of arms, to any persons, without good warrant by the law of arms: or usurped or taken by persons unlawfully, and without good warrant by the law of arms; and upon due examination and trial thereof, to revoke and disannul all such as should be so tried, and found unlawfully or unworthily assigned, or given, or usurped, by any person in the like unlawful manner. Three other commissions were issued during the same reign, for the like purposes; one in the 13th, and the other two in the 15th year thereof.

Derby House, the then college, was entirely consumed by the great fire of London, 1666; but the heralds had the good fortune to save, with the exception of one or two, all their muniments and books: they were timely removed to a room in the palace of Whitehall, and afterwards to an apartment in the palace of Westminster, formerly called the Queen's court. Whereupon, public notice was given, that the heralds' office would be held there, for a certain space of time. The college was soon afterwards begun to be rebuilt, and the expences thereof were defrayed, partly by the subscriptions of the nobility and gentry, and partly by contributions from the members thereof, and by sums made up by the general fees and profits of the office. In November 1683, the college part of the building was finished; and the rooms divided among the officers by their mutual agreement, and according to their degrees, and were afterwards confirmed to them by the earl marshal; which apartments have been ever since annexed to their respective offices. The college consists of an extensive range of quadrangular buildings, and is one of the most handsome and best designed brick edifices in London.

The importance of these institutions arises equally from the high offices confided to the members thereof, and from the share they contribute to public advantage. Besides the other and various functions which their officers perform, the preservation of genealogies, the registry of legitimate descents, and the innumerable records which by them are made, and deposited therein, have frequently proved of great utility in ascertaining public rights and private inheritances. Lord Chief Justice Coke admits the books of the kings of arms, from their first institution, to be the best evidence in settling controversies about pedigrees, titles of honours, dignities, &c.; so that these books are not only allowed as evidence at common law, in both houses of parliament, and in proceedings in equity, and the ecclesiastical courts; but, with regard to precedence, public ceremonials, and coats of arms, their records are conclusive. Several authors, in their writings, have given an elevated character of the college of arms in London; among these were Maitland and Hector Boetius, who both affirm that it far surpasses every institution of the kind in Europe, for the regular and judicious manner in which it is conducted.

The tracing out genealogies, and making out pedigrees, as well as the regulation of the proper bearing of armorial ensigns, early fell to the employment of the heralds. A proper knowledge of their descent, or tracing the first founder of a family, seems to have early been the desire of most nations. To the patriarch of a family, and the chief of a tribe, this office was generally appropriated; and among the Jews, especially, the greatest attention was paid to lineal descent. In the early centuries, when all the learning of this country was confined within the pale of the cloister, the registering of the succession and connexion of noble families was by ecclesiastics; but that this would soon fall to the lot of heralds, may be gathered from what has already been said of their early employments. The use of arms was so closely connected with the study of genealogy, and more especially when the mode of marshalling in the same escutcheon the armorial bearing of every heir female who had intermarried with the family, became of use, they were still more particularly necessary to each other. It was customary for the heralds of nobles to make out their lords' pedigrees illuminated with their arms; and there are some extant of very early date. The utility of family records would soon become evident; for, as it frequently occurs, that immediate inheritors of estates are wanting, and that heirs have to be sought from among the collaterals, by a reference to such pedigrees, the right and lawful successor is at once pointed out. After the heralds were incorporated, their college became the archives where such information was preserved. The foundation of an immense mass of genealogical documents which they possess, was originally obtained by transcribing those conventual registers, which, before their establishment, formed the only authorities besides oral tradition. In continuing those, to be as correct as possible would be their interest, that thereby the public might resort to them with greater facility and assurance, to obtain information. With this view, and also to correct the abuses and mistakes which were occasioned by the improper assumption of armorial bearings, a visitation of each county was decreed by the earl marshal. Such are said to have been made in the reigns of Henry IV. Edward IV. and Henry VII.; of which, imperfect documents only have reached us. A proclamation was also made by Henry V. declaring that no man, of what estate, degree, or condition soever, should assume arms, or coats of arms, unless he held, or ought to hold, them by right of inheritance, or by the donation of some person who had sufficient power to give them; and that all persons should make it appear, to officers to be appointed by the said king for that purpose, by whose gift they enjoyed such arms as they respectively bore, excepting those who bore arms with the king at the battle of Agincourt.

But irregularities in matters concerning nobility and gentility, their descents, pedigrees, designations, titles, honours, arms, crests, &c. increased with the course of time: so that it required the full authority of the crown to put any stop to them. Therefore, as a remedy, commissions were issued under the great seal of England, to each of the two provincial kings of arms, authorizing and commanding each of them, by himself, or his sufficient deputy or deputies, under the seal of his office deputed and authorized, to visit the whole of his province, and all the parts and members thereof, according to the law of arms, and that from time to time, and as often, and whenever he should think fit; and to convene and call before him, or his deputy or deputies, at such certain places, and at such convenient times, as he or they should appoint, all manner of persons that did, or pretended to bear arms, or were styled esquires or gentlemen, within his province; and to cause them to produce and show by what authority and right they challenged and claimed the same; and further granting such officer and officers full power and license, not only to enter, upon reasonable request, and at reasonable times in the day, into all churches, castles, houses, and other places, at his or their discretion, to peruse, take knowledge of, survey, and view all manner of arms, cognizances, crests, and other devices, of all persons within his province, authorized to bear such, with the notes of their descents, pedigrees, marriages, and issue; and to enter the same on record in a register book of arms, according to the form prescribed and set forth in the office, charge, and oath taken by him at his creation and coronation; and also to correct, control, and reform all manner of arms, crests, cognizances, and devices, unlawfully usurped, borne, or taken by any manner of person within such province, and contrary to the due order of the law of arms; and to reverse, pull down, or otherwise deface the same, at his or their discretion, wheresoever they were placed or set, or in whatever form, contrary to the ancient customs, laws, rules, privileges, and order of arms; with full power and authority to reprove, control, and make infamous, by proclamation, to be made at the assizes or general sessions, to be kept within his province, or at any other place or places, all manner of persons that unlawfully, or without just authority, vocation, or due calling, had usurped, or taken upon him or them, any manner of title of honour, dignity, or worship; as esquire, gentleman, or other. The regulations concerning funerals and mourning apparel, prescribed in the time of Henry VII. were also to be enforced; as, also, that no person should, at any funeral or interment, furnish or supply any pall of velvet without the special license of such provincial king. These commissions also prohibited all painters, goldsmiths, engravers, and other artificers, within the province, from executing any manner of arms, crests, cognizances, pedigrees, or other devices appertaining to the office of arms, unless he should be allowed by the provincial king, or his deputy; and likewise enjoined all sheriffs, commissioners, archdeacons, officials, commissaries, scribes, clerks, writers, &c. not to call or name in any assize, session, court, or other public place, or give in any writing the addition of esquire or gentleman, to or for any person whatsoever, unless he were able to stand unto, or justify the same by the law of arms, or should be ascertained thereof, by advertisement, in writing, from the provincial kings.

That nothing might be wanting for the furtherance and due execution of these commissions, all justices, mayors, sheriffs, bailiffs, constables, and other officers, were required to be aiding and assistant thereto; and if in such visitation, any matter could not be decided by the provincial king of arms, then he was authorized to command the person concerned, under a penalty, to appear before the earl marshal, on a time appointed, by whom it would be decided.

In consequence of such commissions being sealed, the provincial king of arms issued a warrant under his hand and seal, directed to the high constable of the hundred, or to the mayor or chief officer of the place, where he intended to hold his visitation, commanding him to warn the several knights, esquires, and gentlemen, particularly named in such warrant, as also all others resident within his jurisdiction, as well those who assumed such titles, as those that did not, to appear personally before him, at the house and on the day specified in the warrant; and to bring with them such arms and crests as they then bore, together with their pedigrees and descents, and such evidences and ancient writings as might justify the same, in order to their being registered.

On the day appointed, either the provincial king, or his marshal, or deputy attended, in order to make the proper inquiries. In those days, when the laws of chivalry were still held in high respect, these intimations were pretty generally attended to; an attested pedigree was to be shown by those who had not, in a former visitation, been registered in the book of arms; whilst those who had, produced their certificate, which they then received, with a table of the succeeding descent.

In many cases, the admittance of the claim or title was respited, if it so happened that the proper proofs were not ready to be produced, on the account of removal from other counties, or such causes; such persons were admitted to enter themselves, with as many generations upwards, as they could clear, together with such arms as they used; and further proofs were ordered to be produced in the next visitation.

The earliest visitation recorded in the college of arms, took place in 1528-9, by order of a commission granted and executed by Thomas Benoit, Clarencieux, for the counties of Gloucester, Worcester, Oxford, Wilts. Berks. and Stafford. After this, visitations were regularly made once in every twenty-five or thirty years. They were much encouraged by many of the private gentry, who gave every facility to the plan, by liberal communications; yet evasions and objections were made by many persons; and by some, a total contempt of the court of chivalry and its customs was openly avowed. Those who thus disclaimed all title to armorial ensigns, are noted in several visitations; and, in consequence, their posterity are considered as having no right to bearings of any description, unless they were afterwards specially conceded. The esteem in which visitations were held, was much lessened by the heralds deputing and authorizing incompetent persons, who, to a want of dignity, added motives entirely mercenary, which caused them to grant and allow the ensigns of gentility to mean and unqualified persons; which, of course, not only gave umbrage to the ancient gentry, but contributed to throw an odium upon the institution. But when such illicit proceedings were discovered by the court of chivalry, they were not only disowned, but properly punished. Causes such as these, together with the quarrels of the heralds, which operated much to their detriment, and the frequent prohibitions granted by the king's bench, to stop proceedings in the curia militaris, or earl marshal's court, gave no inconsiderable check to the visitations of the provincial kings; and when the powers of the last-mentioned court ceased, by reason of no constable of England being appointed, when the officers of arms could no longer maintain their authority, enforce their commands, or punish delinquents, commissions for visitations were no longer applied for. The last that was issued bears date 13th of May, 2nd James II. 1686, and was granted to Henry St. George, Clarencieux, and authorized him to visit his province, from time to time, as often, and when he should think meet and convenient for the same; he therefore began his visitation on the 8th of July, 1686; and in 1687, visited the wards of Billingsgate, Castle Baynard, and Cornhill; and afterwards registered some pedigrees, which bear date so late as the years 1700, 1703, and 1704.

The want of genealogical documents after visitations had ceased to be made, was attempted to be supplied by funeral certificates; which, had they been encouraged, and the regular delivery of them into the college of arms enforced by public authority, would have proved extremely serviceable in bringing down and authenticating the pedigrees of our nobility and gentry.

Besides the heralds' college at London, there is the Lord Lyon king of arms for Scotland, who is second king at arms for Great Britain; and also Ulster king of arms for Ireland. The regalia of Lyon are, a crown of gold, with a crimson velvet cap, a gold tassel, and an ermine lining, a velvet robe reaching to his feet, with the arms of the kingdom embroidered thereon before and behind, in the proper tinctures; a triple row of gold chain round his neck, with an oval gold medal pendent thereto; on one side of which is the royal bearing; and on the other, St. Andrew with his cross, enamelled in proper colours, and a baton of gold enamelled green, powdered with the badges of the kingdom. Formerly, Scotland was divided into two provinces, the one on the north, and the other on the south side of the Forth; and these provinces were under the management of two deputies, appointed by the Lord Lyon, to superintend the execution of all the business of his office. Before the revolution, the Lord Lyon, at his admission into office, was solemnly crowned by the sovereign or his commissioner, in presence of the nobility, officers of state, &c. after a suitable sermon preached in the royal chapel; and his crown was of the same form with the imperial crown of the kingdom. On solemn occasions, he wears the regalia above described; at all other times, the oval gold medal or badge on his breast, suspended by a broad green ribbon. He has the absolute disposal of all the offices in his own court, and of the heralds and pursuivants' places. The messengers at arms, throughout Scotland, are also created by him, and are amenable to his jurisdiction.

Ulster was substituted, as some say, in the room of Ireland king of arms, by Edward VI.; though the king himself, in his journal, takes notice of it as a new institution. "There was a king of arms made for Ireland," says his majesty, "whose name was Ulster, and his province was all Ireland; and he was fourth king at arms, and the first herald in Ireland." The patent passed under the great seal of England, with an ample testimony of the necessity and dignity of the office. Whether Ulster was substituted in the room of Ireland king of arms, or was newly erected, we cannot decide; but such an officer of the crown of England, on which Ireland is dependent, still continues, and may execute his heraldic order in this kingdom, though out of his province, in as extensive a manner as either Clarenceux or Norroy may do, without the limits of either of their marches.

NOBILITY AND GENTRY.

SINCE a gradation of rank is not only unavoidable, but, undoubtedly, highly essential in contributing to the general benefit of society; and as those distinctions are derived from noble birth; acquired by those superior energies of the mind which excite a laudable ambition and generous emulation, to the forming and accomplishing of arduous undertakings, that lead to high attainments, affluence, pre-eminence, and honour; or occasioned by the possession of property, either hereditary, or obtained by skill and industry; we shall now describe the different degrees of nobility and gentry. But it may, perhaps, first be necessary to give a brief description of true honour: that being an essential quality of a real gentleman.

Honour, says Cicero, is the reward of virtue, as infamy is the recompense of vice; so that he who aspires to honour is to come to it by the way of virtue; which the Romans expressed by building the temple of Honour in such a manner, that there was no going into it without passing through the temple of Virtue. Honour, in itself, is a testimony of a man's virtue; and he that desires to be honoured, ought to perform something that is valuable in the sight of God and man. Thus, birth alone will not make a man truly honourable, unless his actions and behaviour are suitable to his descent. The tokens of honour are, being distinguishably known, praiseworthy, excelling others, and generosity; and ought to be more valued than all earthly treasures; for it is the hope of honour that excites men to perform noble actions. And, as Dr. Blair, in the third volume of his admirable Sermons, says, "By the true honour of man, is to be understood, not what merely commands respect, but what commands the respect of the heart; what raises one to acknowledged eminence, above others of the same species; what always creates esteem, and, in its highest degree, produces veneration.

"The question now before us is, from what cause doth this eminence arise, by what means is it to be obtained." After showing that it does not arise from riches, from the dignity of rank or office, or from the splendid actions and abilities which excite admiration, he proceeds to show, that "similar remarks may be applied to all the reputation derived from civil accomplishments; from the refined politics of the statesman; or the literary efforts of genius and erudition. These bestow, and within certain bounds, ought to bestow, eminence and distinction on men. They discover talents which in themselves are shining; and which become highly valuable, when employed in advancing the good of mankind. Hence, they frequently give rise to fame. But a distinction is to be made between fame and true honour. The former is the loud and noisy applause; the latter, a more silent and internal homage. Fame floats on the breath of the multitude; honour rests on the judgment of the thinking. Fame may give praise, while it withholds esteem. True honour implies esteem mingled with respect. The one regards particular distinguished talents; the other looks up to the whole character. Hence, the statesman, the orator, or the poet, may be famous; while yet the man himself is far from being honoured. We envy his abilities. We wish to rival them. But we would not choose to be classed with him who possesses them. Instances of this sort are too often found in every record of ancient or modern history.

“From all this it follows, that, in order to discern where man’s true honour lies, we must look, not to any adventitious circumstances of fortune; not to any single sparkling quality; but to the whole of what forms a man; what entitles him, as such, to rank high among that class of beings to which he belongs; in a word, we must look to the mind and the soul. A mind superior to fear, to selfish interest and corruption; a mind governed by the principles of uniform rectitude and integrity; the same in prosperity and adversity; which no bribe can seduce, nor terror overawe; neither by pleasure melted into effemiacy, nor by distress sunk into dejection: such is the mind which forms the distinction and eminence of man.—One, who in no situation of life, is either ashamed or afraid of discharging his duty, and acting his proper part with firmness and constancy; true to the God whom he worships, and true to the faith in which he professes to believe; full of affection to his brethren of mankind; faithful to his friends, generous to his enemies, warm with compassion to the unfortunate; self-denying to little private interests and pleasures, but zealous for public interest and happiness; magnanimous, without being proud; humble, without being mean; just, without being harsh; simple in his manners, but manly in his feelings; on whose word we can entirely rely; whose countenance never deceives us; whose professions of kindness are the effusions of his heart; one, in fine, whom, independently of any views of advantage, we should choose for a superior, could trust in as a friend, and could love as a brother—this is the man, whom in our heart, above all others, we do, we must honour.”

A noble instance of the true honour of a soldier, is recorded of Norby, Grand Admiral of Denmark. When his king and commander, Christian II. ordered him to assassinate Christine, “No,” replied Norby, “this employment is not suited to me; I am a soldier, not an executioner. I have learnt to obey you, but without shame, and without crime. Command me, and, if it be necessary, I will brave a thousand deaths; spare neither my property nor my life, for they belong to my King.—MY HONOUR ALONE BELONGS TO MYSELF.”

The king is called the fountain of honour, because he has the privilege of bestowing titles and dignities, which raise some men above others; but the truest honour depends upon merit; and it is supposed that sovereigns bestow their favours on such as deserve them; but if the contrary should happen, the rank or precedence may be given, though the real honour be wanting. This is, however, too nice a point for discussion; and, therefore, taking honour in the common acceptation, it is due to all persons in authority, as princes, generals, prelates, officers of state, &c. &c.

OF THE KING.

THIS is the most universal of all titles, and is derived from the Saxon word kaning, and that from can, intimating power; or ken, knowledge, wherewith every sovereign should especially be invested; he having ever been of great reverence, being by law esteemed God’s vicegerant on earth, ascribing various perfections to him, not belonging to any other man.

It has been the custom of some of the principal monarchs of Europe to add some distinguishing epithet to the title of King; thus, the King of Persia had, anciently, the appellation of Great King; the King of France has that of The Most Christian King; and the King of Spain, The Most Catholic King. The Kings of England had, by the Lateran council, under Pope Julius II. the title of Christianissimus conferred on them; and that of Defender of the Faith was added by Pope Leo X. The title of Grace was first given to our kings about the reign of Henry IV.; in Henry VI.’s time, it was altered to Excellent Grace; Henry VII. was addressed by that of Highness; and Henry VIII. by that of Majesty. This afterwards became Sacred Majesty; and is now Most Sacred Majesty. The king’s title is, “By the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of Hanover, King, Defender of the Faith.” In all public instruments and letters, the King styles himself “We;” though, till the time of King John, he spoke in the singular number.

The successors of Charlemagne, in the empire of the west, were accustomed to associate with themselves in the government, the person whose election they wished to secure to succeed themselves, by crowning him King of the Romans. This power of conferring royalty has been claimed by the emperor, in modern times; and was exercised by Leopold, in the case of the Elector of Brandenburg, whom he raised to the dignity of King of Prussia. The other European princes refused to acknowledge this title for some time; but, at the Treaty of Utrecht, they all agreed to admit it. The late Emperor of France, who wished to restore the dignity of the Western Emperors in his own person, exercised several of the privileges of that office. He created his son King of the Romans; and elevated to the rank of Kings, the Electors of Saxony and Wirtemberg; the title of the latter has since been recognised, and Holland and Hanover have been added to the regal governments of Europe. The Hungarians formerly gave the name of King to their Queen Mary, to avoid the infamy which the laws of that country cast upon those who are governed by women; accordingly, she bore the title of King Mary, till her marriage with Sigismund, at which time she took the title of Queen.

The supreme executive power of the British dominions is vested, by the English laws, in a single person, the king or queen; for it matters not to which sex the crown descends, for the person entitled to it, whether male or female, is immediately invested with all the ensigns, rights, and prerogatives of sovereign power, by the general consent of the people; the evidence of which general consent is, long and immemorial usage. It became necessary to the freedom and peace of the state, that a rule should be laid down, uniform and permanent, in order to mark out, with precision, who is that single person, to whom is committed, in subservience to the law of the land, the care and protection of the community; and to whom, in return, the duty and allegiance of every individual is due.

The grand fundamental maxim upon which the jus coronæ, or right of succession to the throne of Britain depends, Sir William Blackstone takes to be this: that the crown is, by common law, and constitutional custom, hereditary; and this in a manner peculiar to itself; but that the right of inheritance may, from time to time, be changed or limited by act of parliament; under which limitations the crown still continues hereditary, and descendible to the next heir, on the death of the last king. All regal governments must be either hereditary or elective; and as there is no instance, wherein the crown of England has ever been asserted to be elective (except the short interval, when Cromwell usurped, the authority under a different name, between the reigns of Charles I. and II.) it must of consequence be hereditary. Yet, in asserting this right, a jure-divino title to the throne is by no means intended. Such a title may be allowed to have subsisted under the theocratic establishments of Israel, in Palestine, but it never yet subsisted in any other country; save only so far as kingdoms, like other human fabrics, are subjected to the general and ordinary dispensations of Providence. Nor indeed have a jure-divino and hereditary right any necessary connexion with each other, as some have very weakly imagined.

The hereditary right which the laws of Britain acknowledge, owes its origin to the founders of our constitution, and to them only. This has been acquiesced in, by general consent; and ripened by degrees into common law: it is the very same title that every private man has to his own estate, for lands are not naturally descendible, any more than thrones; but the law has, for the benefit and peace of the public, established hereditary succession in the one, as well as in the other.

It must be owned, an elective monarchy seems to be the most obvious and best suited of any, to the national principles of government, and the freedom of human nature; and accordingly we find from history, that, in the infancy and first rudiments of almost every state, the leader, chief magistrate, or prince, has usually been elective; and if the individuals who compose that state, could always continue true to first principles, uninfluenced by passion or prejudice, unassailed by corruption, and unawed by violence, elective succession would be as desirable in a kingdom, as it is in other inferior communities. The best, the wisest, and the bravest man would then be sure of receiving that crown which his endowments merited; and the sense of an unbiassed majority would be dutifully acquiesced by the few, who were of different opinions. But history and observation inform us, that elections of every kind are too often brought about by influence, partiality, and artifice; and even where the case is otherwise, these practices will be often suspected, and as constantly charged upon the successful, by a disappointed minority. This is an evil, to which all societies are liable, as well those of a private and domestic kind, as of the great community of the public, which regulates and includes the rest. But, in the former, there is this advantage, that such suspicions, if false, proceed no further than jealousies and murmurs, which time will effectually suppress; or justice may remedy it by legal means, by an appeal to those tribunals, to which every member of society has virtually engaged to submit. Whereas, in the great and independent society, which every nation composes, there is no superior to resort to, but the law of nature: no method to redress the infringement of that law, but the actual exertion of force. As, therefore, between two nations complaining of mutual injuries, the quarrel can only be decided by the law of arms; so in one and the same nation, when the fundamental principles of their common union are supposed to be invaded, and more especially when the appointment of the chief magistrate is alleged to be unduly made, the only appeal that can be made, is to the sword; and the only process by which the appeal can be carried on, is that of a civil and intestine war. A hereditary succession to the crown is, therefore, now established in this, and most other countries, to prevent the periodical bloodshed and misery, which the history of ancient imperial Rome, and the modern experience of Poland, show us to be the consequence of elective kingdoms.

The doctrine of hereditary right does by no means imply an indefeasible right to the throne. It is unquestionably in the power of the supreme legislative authority of this kingdom, the king and both houses of parliament, to defeat this hereditary right; and by particular entails, limitations, and provisions, to exclude the immediate heir, and vest the inheritance in any one else. This is strictly consonant to our laws and constitution; as may be gathered from the expressions so frequently used in our statute book, of "the king's majesty, his heirs, and successors." In which we may observe, that, as the word heirs necessarily implies an inheritance, or hereditary right generally subsisting in the royal person; so the word successors, distinctly taken, must imply, that this inheritance may sometimes be broken through, or that there may be a successor, without being the heir of the king. And this is extremely reasonable; for without such a power lodged somewhere, our polity would be very defective. Let us barely suppose so melancholy a case, as that the heir apparent should be a lunatic, an idiot, or otherwise incapable of reigning; how miserable would the condition of the nation be, if he were also incapable of being set aside! It is therefore necessary that this power be lodged somewhere; and it can be placed nowhere so properly, as in the two houses of parliament, by and with the consent of the reigning king; who, it is supposed, will not agree to any thing prejudicial to the rights of his own descendants. And, therefore, in the king, lords, and commons, in parliament assembled, our laws have expressly lodged it.

However the crown may be limited or transferred, it still retains its descendible quality, and becomes hereditary in the wearer of it. Hence, in our law, the king is said never to die in his political capacity; though in common with other men, he is subject to mortality in his natural. On this principle, that the king commences his reign from the death of his predecessor, it hath been held, that compassing his death before coronation, or even before proclamation (he being king presently, and the proclamation and coronation only honourable ceremonies for the future notification thereof) is treason.

The principal duty of the king is, to govern the people according to law. The king ought not to be subject to man, but to God and the law; for the law maketh the king. Let the king therefore render to the law, what the law has invested in him with regard to others—dominion and power; for he is not truly a king, where will and pleasure rules, and not the law. The laws of England are the birthright of the people thereof; and all the kings and queens, who shall ascend the throne of this realm, ought to administer the government of the same according to the said laws; and all their officers and ministers ought to serve them respectively, according to the same. And therefore all the other laws and statutes of this realm, for securing the established religion, and the rights and liberties of the people thereof; and all other laws and statutes of the same now in force, are, by his majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and the commons, and by the authority of the same, ratified and confirmed.

The terms of the original contract between the king and people, are couched in the coronation oath, which is to be administered to every king and queen, who shall succeed to the crown of these realms, in the presence of all the people; who, on their parts, do reciprocally take the oath of allegiance to the crown. This splendid ceremony is, in magnificence, equal to its importance, and superior to any other. The oath is as follows.

Archbishop or Bishop. Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the people of this kingdom of England, and the dominions thereunto belonging, according to the statutes of parliament agreed on, and the laws and customs of the same?

King or Queen. I solemnly promise so to do.

Archbishop or Bishop. Will you to your power cause law and justice, in mercy, to be executed in all your judgments?

King or Queen. I will.

Archbishop or Bishop. Will you, to the utmost of your power, maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel, and the Protestant reformed religion established by law? And will you preserve unto the bishops and clergy of this realm, and to the churches committed to their charge, all such rights and privileges as by law do or shall appertain unto them, or any of them?

King or Queen. All this I promise to do.

After this the king or queen, laying his or her hand upon the holy Gospels, says, "The things which I have here before promised I will perform and keep: so help me, God." And then kisses the book.

There are many religious ceremonies attending the coronation: one of which is, the anointing with oil, a very ancient custom, of which Thomas à Becket has remarked: "Kings are anointed with oil on the head, breast, and arms; the first to signify their glory; the next, their sanctity; and the last, their power."

The king is crowned with an imperial crown, which is put on his head by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who claims the office as a prerogative of his See.

The most universal ensign of royalty is the sceptre, with which our sovereign is invested at his coronation, as a symbol of justice; and also a ring, to signify faithfulness; a bracelet, for good works; and a sword, for vengeance. See these respective terms in the Glossary.

The above is the form of the coronation oath, as it is now prescribed by our law, which is indisputably a fundamental and express contract; though, doubtless, the duty of protection is impliedly as much incumbent on the sovereign before coronation as after; in the same manner as allegiance to the king becomes the duty of the subject, immediately on the descent of the crown, before he has taken the oath of allegiance, or whether he ever took it at all. And here we might observe, that the oath expresses all the duties which a monarch can owe to his people, viz. to govern according to law; to execute justice in mercy; and to maintain the established religion. And, with respect to the latter of these three branches, we may further remark, that, by the Act of Union, 5th Anne, c. 8, two preceding statutes are recited and confirmed; the one in the parliament of Scotland, and the other in the parliament of England; which enact, the former, that every king, at his accession, shall take and subscribe an oath, to preserve the protestant religion, and presbyterian church government, in Scotland; the latter, that, at his coronation, he shall take and subscribe a similar oath, to preserve the settlement of the church of England, within England, Ireland, Wales, and Berwick, and the territories thereunto belonging.

In order to assist the king in the discharge of his duties, the maintenance of his dignity, and the execution of his prerogative, the law hath assigned him a diversity of councils to advise with. These are, his parliament, his peers, his privy council, and the judges.

That the king may be enabled to maintain the executive government in due independence and vigour, and to discharge, with honour to himself, and benefit to his subjects, the duties of his high station, the constitution and laws have invested him with a variety of prerogatives. And here we may make this preliminary observation, that there cannot be a stronger proof of that genuine freedom which is the boast of this age and country, than the power of discussing and examining, with decency and respect, the limits of the king's prerogative. This was formerly considered as a high contempt in a subject; even the glorious Queen Elizabeth herself directed her parliament to abstain from judging of her prerogative, or meddling therewith.

The nature of our constitution is, that of a limited monarchy, in which the legislative power is lodged in the king, lords, and commons; but the king is intrusted with the executive part, and from him all justice is said to flow: hence, he is styled the head of the commonwealth, supreme governor, parens patriæ, &c. But still he is to make the law of the land the rule of his government; that being the measure, as well of his power, as of the subject's obedience; for as the law asserts, maintains, and provides for, the safety of the king's royal person, crown, and dignity, and all his just rights, revenues, powers, and prerogatives; so it likewise declares and asserts the rights and liberties of the subject. Hence, it hath been established as a rule, that all prerogatives must be for the advantage of the people; otherwise, they ought not to be allowed by law.

Although the king is the fountain of justice, and intrusted with the whole executive power of the law; yet he hath no power to alter the laws which have been established, and are the birthright of every subject; for by those very laws he is to govern; and as they prescribe the extent and bounds of his prerogative, so, in like manner, they declare and ascertain the rights and liberties of the people; and, therefore, admit of no innovation or change, but by act of parliament.

By the word prerogative is understood, that special pre-eminence which the king hath over and above all other persons, and out of the ordinary course of common law, in right of his royal dignity; such as, no costs shall be recovered against the king; that he can never be a joint-tenant; that his debt shall be preferred to that of a subject; that when the title of the king and that of a common person concur, the king's title shall be preferred. No distress can be made upon the king's possession; but he may distrain out of his fee in other lands, &c. and may take distresses in the highway.

An heir shall pay the king's debt, though he be not named in the bond; and the king's debt shall be satisfied before that of a subject, for which there is a prerogative-writ. But this is where the debt is in equal degree with that of the subject. Goods and chattels may go in succession to the king, though they may not to any other sole corporation. In the hands of whomsoever the goods of the king come, their lands are chargeable, and may be seized for the same; and the king is not bound by sale of his goods in open market. No entry will bar the king; and no judgment is final against him, but with a salvo jure regis. The king may plead several matters, without being guilty of double pleading; and the party shall answer them all. In his pleading, he need not plead an act of parliament, as a subject is bound to do. He is not bound to join in demurrer on evidence, and the court may direct the jury to find the matter specially. The king's own testimony of any thing done in his presence, is of as high a nature and credit as any record; whence, in all original writs or precepts, he useth no other witness than himself.

Debts due to the king are always to be satisfied in the first place, in case of executorship, &c.; and till his debt be discharged, he may protect the creditor from the arrests of others. He may distrain for the whole debt on a tenant that holds but a part of the land; may sue in what court he pleases, and distrain where he lists. In all cases where the king is plaintiff, his officers may enter with an arrest; and, if entrance be denied, break open a house, and seize the party; though, in other cases, a man's house is his castle, and has a privilege to protect him against all arrests. Moreover, no costs shall be recovered against the king; and the king can remove a joint-tenant.

It is also held, that the king is, by his prerogative, universal occupant, as all property is presumed to have been originally in the crown; and that he partitioned it out, in large districts, to the great men who deserved well of him in the wars, and were able to advise him in time of peace. Hence, the king hath the direct dominion; and all lands are holden, mediately or immediately, from the crown.

The law ascribes to the king, the attribute of sovereignty, or pre-eminence. He is said to have imperial dignity; and, in charters before the Conquest, is frequently styled Basileus, and Imperator; the titles respectively assumed by the emperors of the east and west. His realm is declared to be an empire, and his crown imperial, by many acts of parliament; which, at the same time, declare the king to be the supreme head of the realm, in matters both civil and ecclesiastical; and, of consequence, inferior to no man upon earth, dependent on no man, accountable to no man. No king of England used any seal of arms, till the reign of Richard I. Before that time, the seal was, the king sitting in a chair of state on one side, and on horseback on the other; but that king sealed with a seal of two lions; King John was the first that bore three lions: and afterwards, Edward III. quartered the arms of France, which were continued till the Irish Union, 1st of January, 1801.

The meaning of the legislature, in using the terms empire and imperial, and applying them to the realm and crown of England, is only to assert that our king is equally sovereign and independent, within these his dominions, as any emperor in his empire, and owes no kind of subjection to any other potentate upon earth. Hence it is, that no suit or action can be brought against the king, even in civil matters, because no court can have jurisdiction over him. Hence it is, likewise, that, by law, the person of the king is sacred, even though the measures pursued in his reign be completely tyrannical and arbitrary; for no jurisdiction upon earth has power to try him in a criminal way, much less to condemn him to punishment. If any foreign jurisdiction had this power, as was formerly claimed by the Pope, the independence of the kingdom would be no more; and if such a power were vested in any domestic tribunal, there would soon be an end of the constitution, by destroying the free agency of one of the constituent parts of the sovereign legislative power.

Are then, it may be asked, the subjects of England totally destitute of remedy, in case the crown should invade their rights, either by private injuries, or public oppressions? To this it may be answered, that the law has provided a remedy in both cases. As to private injuries, if any person has, in point of property, a just demand upon the king, he must petition him in his court of chancery, where his chancellor will administer right as a matter of grace, though not upon compulsion. As to cases of ordinary public oppression, where the vitals of the constitution are not attacked, the law has also assigned a remedy; for as the king cannot misuse his power without the advice of evil counsellors, and the assistance of wicked ministers, these men may be examined and punished. The constitution has therefore provided, by means of indictment and parliamentary impeachment, that no man shall dare to assist the crown in contradiction to the law of the land. But, at the same time, it is a maxim in those laws, that the king himself can do no wrong; since it would be a great weakness and absurdity in any system of positive law, to define any possible wrong without any possible redress.

Besides the attributes of sovereignty, the law also ascribes to the king, in his political capacity, absolute perfection. The king can do no wrong. This ancient and fundamental maxim is not to be understood as if every thing done by the government was of course just and lawful, but means only two things. First, that whatever is exceptionable in the conduct of public affairs is not to be imputed to the king, nor is he answerable for it personally to his people. Secondly, it means, that the prerogative of the crown extends not to do any injury: it is created for the benefit of the people, and therefore cannot be exerted to their prejudice; or, perhaps, it means, that, although the king is subject to the passions and infirmities of other men, the constitution has prescribed no mode by which he can be made personally amenable for any wrong that he may actually commit. The law will, therefore, presume no wrong, where it has provided no remedy. The inviolability of the king is essentially necessary to the free exercise of those high prerogatives which are vested in him, not for his own private splendour and gratification, as the vulgar and ignorant are too apt to imagine, but for the security and preservation of the real happiness and liberty of his subjects.

The king, moreover, is not only incapable of doing wrong, but also of thinking wrong; he can never mean to do an improper thing: in him is no folly or weakness. If, therefore, the crown should be induced to grant any franchise or privilege to a subject, contrary to reason, or any way prejudicial to the commonwealth, or a private person, the law will not suppose the king to have meant either an unwise or an injurious action: but declares that the king was deceived in his grant; and, therefore, such grant is rendered void, merely upon the foundation of fraud and deception, either by or upon those agents whom the crown has thought proper to employ.

In the king, also, can be no stain or corruption of blood; for if the heir to the crown were attainted of treason or felony, and afterwards the crown should descend to him, this would purge the attainder ipso facto.

Neither can the king, in judgment of law, as king, ever be a minor, or under age; and therefore his royal grants and assents to acts of parliament are good, though he has not in his natural capacity attained the age of twenty-one.

In the exercise of these branches of the royal prerogative, which invest this our sovereign lord, thus all perfect and immortal in his kingly capacity, with a number of authorities and powers, consists the executive part of the government. This is, by the constitution, wisely placed in a single hand, for the sake of unanimity, strength, and despatch. The king of England is, therefore, not only the chief, but, properly, the sole magistrate of the nation; all others acting by commission from, and in due subordination to him.

In the exertion of lawful prerogative, the king is, and ought to be absolute; that is, so far absolute that there is no legal authority that can either delay or resist him. He may reject what bills, make what treaties, create what peers, and pardon what offences he pleases; unless where the constitution hath expressly, or by evident consequence, laid down some exception or boundary, declaring that thus far the prerogative shall go, and no further.

With regard to foreign concerns, the king is the delegate, or representative of his people; and as such, has the sole power of sending ambassadors to foreign states. It is also the king's prerogative to make treaties, leagues, and alliances with foreign states and princes; and to make war and peace. The king is considered, in the next place, as the generalissimo, or the first in military command in the kingdom; and, in this capacity, has the sole power of raising and regulating fleets and armies; building forts, and other places of strength; appointing ports and havens; erecting beacons and lighthouses within this realm; prohibiting the exportation of arms or ammunition out of this kingdom, under severe penalties; and, also, of confining his subjects to stay within the realm, or of recalling them when beyond the seas.

In domestic affairs, the king is considered as the fountain of justice, and general conservator of the peace of the kingdom. However, by the fountain of justice, the law does not mean the author, or original, but only the distributor. Justice is not derived from the king, as from his free gift; but he is the steward of the public, to dispense it to whom it is due. In this capacity, the king alone has the right of erecting courts of judicature; and all jurisdictions of courts are, either mediately or immediately, derived from the crown. Thus, proceedings run generally in the king's name; they pass under his seal, and are executed by his officers. The prerogative of issuing proclamations is vested in him alone.

The king is likewise the fountain of honour, of office, and of privilege. Accordingly, he is intrusted with the sole power of conferring dignities and honours; so that all degrees of nobility, knighthood, and other titles, are received by immediate grants from the crown, either expressed in writing, by writs or letters patent, as in the creation of peers and baronets; or by corporeal investiture, as in the creation of a simple knight. And, as the king may create new titles, so he may create new offices; but with this restriction, that he cannot create new offices with new fees annexed to them, nor annex new fees to old offices; for this would be a tax upon the subject, which cannot be imposed, but by act of parliament. The king has also the prerogative of conferring privileges on private persons; such as granting place or precedence to any of his subjects; also the power to enfranchise an alien, and make him a denizen; and likewise the prerogative of erecting corporations.

The king is also the arbiter of commerce. He can establish public marts, such as markets and fairs, and the tolls belonging to them; regulate weights and measures; and give to money, which is the medium of commerce, authority, or make it current. The coining of money is also the act of sovereign power; and the settling of the denomination or value, for which the coin is to pass current. The king may also, at any time, decry, or cry down, any coin of the kingdom, and make it no longer current.

He has also custody of the persons and estates of idiots and lunatics; and to him revert all estates, when no heir appears. All treasure trove, (i. e. money, plate, or bullion, found, and the owners not known) belong to him; so all waifs, estrays, wrecks, lands recovered from the sea, gold and silver mines, royal fishes, &c. belong to him.

By the laws of England, the king is considered as the head and supreme governor of the national church. In virtue of this authority, he convenes, prorogues, restrains, regulates, and dissolves all ecclesiastical synods or convocations. He has the supreme right of patronage, called patronage paramount, over all the ecclesiastical benefices in England. From this prerogative, of being the head of the church, arises the king's right of nomination to vacant bishoprics, and certain other ecclesiastical preferments. The king can unite, separate, enlarge, or control the limits of bishoprics, or ecclesiastical benefices; and, by his letters, erect new bishoprics, colleges, &c. He can moderate the rigour of the law, according to equity, to pardon a man condemned by law, except in appeals of murder, and in cases of impeachment by the house of commons; and to interpret by his judges, in statutes and cases not defined by law.

From the foregoing, it will appear, that the power of the king is subject to great limitations; but they are the limitations of wisdom, and the sources of dignity; being so far from diminishing his honour, that they add a particular glory to his crown; for while he is restrained from acting inconsistently with his own happiness, and that of the people, he has great prerogatives, and an almost boundless power of doing good.

THE QUEEN.

THE Queen is so called from the Saxon word cuningine, as the king from konig; and the queen sovereign, to whom the crown descends, is equal in power to the king.

The queen consort, or wife of the reigning king, is the second person in the kingdom, and, by virtue of her marriage, is participant of divers prerogatives above other women. She is a public person, distinct from the king; and not like other married women, so closely connected as to have lost all legal or separate existence. For the queen is of ability to purchase lands, and convey them, to make leases, to grant copyholds, and to do other acts of ownership, without the concurrence of her lord. She is also capable of receiving a grant from the king, which no other wife is from her husband. The Queen of England is allowed regal robes, and a crown in the same form as a sovereign queen weareth; may be crowned with royal solemnity; and is permitted to sit in state by the king. She has separate courts and officers, distinct from the king's, not only in matters of ceremony, but even of law; together with the yeomen of the guard, to attend her at home; and her life-guard of horse, for state and security, when she goes abroad. Also her attorney and solicitor general are intitled to a place within the bar of his majesty's courts, together with the king's counsel. The same honour and respect which are due to the king, are due to her. She may likewise sue, and be sued alone, without joining her husband. She may also have a separate property in goods, as well as lands; and has a right to dispose of them by will. In short, in all legal proceedings, she is looked upon as a feme sole, and not as a feme covert; as a single, not as a married woman. For which, the reason given is this, because the wisdom of the common law would not have the king, (whose continual care and study are for the public) to be troubled and disquieted on account of his wife's domestic affairs; and therefore it vests in the queen, a power of transacting her own concerns, without the intervention of the king.

The queen has also many exemptions and minute prerogatives. For instance, she pays no toll; nor is she liable to any amercement in any court. But, in general, unless the law has expressly declared her exempted, she is upon the same footing with other subjects; being, to all intents and purposes, the king's subject, and not his equal. Nevertheless, it is equally treason to compass or imagine the death of our lady, the king's companion, as of the king himself; and to violate or defile the queen consort, amounts to the same crime; as well in the person committing the fact, as in the queen herself, if consenting. If, however, the queen be accused of any species of treason, she shall, whether consort or dowager, be tried by the peers of parliament.

The husband of a queen regnant, as Prince George of Denmark was to Queen Anne, is her subject, and may be guilty of treason against her; but in the instance of conjugal infidelity, he is not subject to the same penal restrictions.

Queen dowager, or queen mother, takes place next to the queen consort, and loseth not her dignity, although she should marry a private gentleman; but no man can marry her, without special license from the king; on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. She, as widow of the king, enjoys most of the prerogatives belonging to her as queen consort; but it is not high treason to violate her chastity, or to conspire her death, because the succession is not endangered thereby.

PRINCES AND PRINCESSES.

SINCE the union with Scotland, the title of the king's eldest son hath been Prince of Great Britain, but ordinarily created Prince of Wales; and, as the eldest son, he is Duke of Cornwall from his birth, as likewise Duke of Rothsay, and Seneschal of Scotland.

At his creation, he is presented before the king, in his surcoat, cloak, and mantle of crimson velvet, being girt with a belt of the same; and the king putteth a cap and coronet upon his head, the cap of the same as his robes, indented and turned up ermine; and the coronet of gold, composed of crosses pattée and fleurs-de-lis, with one arch, and in the middle a mound and cross, as hath the royal diadem: a ring on his middle finger; a staff of gold in his hand; and his letters patent after they are read.

His mantle of creation, which he wears at the coronation of a king, is doubled below the elbow with ermine, spotted diamondways; but the robe which he wears in parliament, is adorned on the shoulders with five bars, or guards, of ermine, set at a distance from each other, with a gold lace above each bar.

None of the royal family are, as such, lords of parliament, except the king's eldest son, who is, by birth, as before mentioned, Duke of Cornwall. So soon as the other princes of the blood attain the age of twenty-one, they are usually called to a seat in the house of peers. They no longer retain the title prince prefixed to their names, but assume the particular title by which they are empowered to sit in parliament. Their peerages in Great Britain are usually dukedoms; in Ireland, earldoms; yet, were they only baronies, the princes of the royal family would still precede all the other peers and lords of parliament. The princes of the blood are the sons, grandsons, brothers, uncles, and nephews of the king. The princesses are such as stand in the same degrees of proximity to the crown, whether by birth or marriage. Besides the title of prince or princess prefixed to their names, they have also respectively that of Royal Highness. Dukes of the blood are considered to rank as archdukes, and their coronets are composed of crosses and fleurs-de-lis. See Coronets, in the Glossary. They are styled Most High, Most Mighty, and Illustrious Princes.

NOBILITY.

THE origin of nobility in Europe, was, no doubt, among the Goths; who, after they had seized on a part of Europe, rewarded their captains with titles of honour, to distinguish them from the common people. That the barons of England were powerful before the Conquest, is clear, from Harold, Earl of Kent, being able to seize the crown upon the death of Edward the Confessor; but their greatest power arose from the Norman Conquest. The victorious William had been at the French courts, which, together with the consequent influences of education, rendered him partial to their form of government, and habitually fond of the magnificence and martial parade, which were there attended to. This was soon apparent, after he had established himself on the throne of England; and, operating with his aversion to the people and their manners, caused him to introduce many of the continental customs. So extensive indeed were the innovations produced by the change of government, that the French language alone was spoken at court, and all state proceedings were carried on in the same tongue, which caused the vanquishers and vanquished, for a length of time, to remain distinct. The Conqueror, in order to render his Conquest more secure, rewarded most of his faithful and powerful adherents with the principal lands and offices in this kingdom, despoiling most of the British and Anglo-Saxon nobles of their fortunes and estates; many of whom, that escaped with life, fled into Scotland; and few indeed who had opposed the Conqueror, retained their possessions in peace. Still more effectually to secure their attachment to his person and interest, he adopted the plan of Hugh Capet, in establishing a hereditary nobility. "Hugh Capet," says the celebrated civilian, Francis Hototau, "contrived a cunning device, for establishing himself in his new dominions; for, whereas all the magistracies and honours of the kingdom, such as dukedoms, earldoms, &c. had been, from the most ancient times, conferred upon select and deserving persons, in the general conventions of the people, and were not hereditary, but held only during good behaviour; whereof, as the lawyers express it, they were but beneficiaries. Hugh Capet, in order to secure to himself the affections and interest of the great men, was the first who made those honours perpetual, which had before been but temporary; and ordained that, whoever, by their merits and loyalty, obtained them, should have a hereditary right in their titles and arms, and might leave them to their posterity." See Franciscus Conanus, the civilian, Comment II. Chap. 9. Thus the Conqueror rewarded those of his followers, in whose fidelity he could confide; and, in order that their names and actions might be recorded to posterity, they were enlisted in a roll, and hung up in Battle Abbey, near which the decisive victory had been obtained; they became the ancestors of the most distinguished families in this kingdom; and many of our illustrious nobility owe the foundation of their fortunes to that eventful period.

The word nobility is now generally applied to the collected body of peers, who form a distinct portion of the legislature, comprising five gradations of rank; descending from the elevated honours of DUKE, through the intervening degrees of MARQUESS, EARL, and VISCOUNT, to the old feudal dignity of BARON; to which may be added a sixth, viz. a BISHOP, which, although not a hereditary title, is nevertheless, from that dignity, entitled to a seat in the house of peers; these, in their corporate capacity, form one of the estates of the realm—that immediately between the crown and the people; and, though a privileged order personally, their immunities are very unimportant, and minister more to the pomp than the power of the possessor. In no one instance, can the proudest peer transgress, with impunity, the laws of the land; nor the haughtiest lord invade the rights of the humblest commoner. Thus, then, they exist but as a link in the great chain which unites the community at large.—A link, more polished, perhaps, than the others; hardly more powerful. In the above titles, almost solely, does the English nobility bear resemblance to that of other countries. "Placed," says Mr. Moore, in his Life of Sheridan, "as a sort of breakwater between the people and the throne, in a state of double responsibility—to liberty on one side, and authority on the other,—the aristocracy of England holds a station, which is dignified by its own great duties, and of which the titles transmitted by their ancestors form the least important ornament; unlike the nobility of other countries, where the rank and privileges of the father are multiplied through the offspring, and equally elevate them above the level of the community. The highest English nobleman must consent to be the father but of commoners. Thus connected with the class below him, by private as well as public sympathies, he gives his children to the people, as hostages for the sincerity of his zeal in their cause; while, on the other hand, the people, in return for those pledges of the aristocracy, send a portion of their own elements aloft into the higher region, to mingle with its glories, and assert their claim to a share in its power. By this mutual transfusion, an equilibrium is preserved, like that which similar processes maintain in the natural world; and while a healthy popular feeling circulates through the aristocracy, a sense of their own station in the scale, elevates the people."

DUKE.

THE most elevated dignity in the English peerage, is derived from the Latin word dux, a leader or captain of an army. After the Conquest, this title laid dormant till the reign of Edward III. who created his son, Edward the Black Prince, in 1377, (then Earl of Chester) Duke of Cornwall; and, subsequently, Prince of Wales, when the dukedom merged in the principality, and has ever since been vested in the heir apparent to the crown, who, at his birth, becomes Duke of Cornwall. The second dukedom was conferred on the 6th of March, 1351, upon Henry Plantagenet, son and heir of the Earl of Derby, under the title of Duke of Lancaster, which dignity expired at his grace's demise in 1360, without male issue; but was reconferred in 1362, upon John of Gaunt, who had espoused the duke's second daughter, eventually sole heiress, the Lady Blanch Plantagenet. After him, others were made with great solemnity, and in such a manner that their titles descended to their posterity. However, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, A.D. 1572, the order became extinct; but was revived about fifty years afterwards, by her successor, in the person of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham.

A duke is created by patent, as follows. He must have on, his surcoat, cloak, and hood, and be led between two dukes, an earl going somewhat before him on the right hand, bearing a cap of estate, with a coronet on it; which cap is of crimson velvet, lined with ermine, and the coronet gold; but the cap must not be indented, as that of the prince: on the other side, must go an earl, bearing a golden rod or verge: before the duke to be created, shall go a marquess, bearing a sword; and before him an earl, with the mantle, or robe of estate, lying on his arm; which mantle is the same as that of the prince, being fine scarlet cloth, lined with white taffeta, and is doubled on the shoulders with four guards of ermine at equal distance, with a gold lace above each guard, to difference it from that of the prince. Being thus attired, he is, by the said peers, (who must be in their robes of estate) conducted into the presence-chamber. After the oath, obeisance being made three times to the king sitting in his chair of estate, the person so vested kneeling down, and Garter king of arms delivering his patent to the king's secretary, he presents it to the king, who delivers it again to be read aloud; and, at the word investimus, the king puts a duke's mantle, as described below, upon the person to be so made; and at the words gladio cincturamus, girts him with a sword; at cappe et circuli aurei impositionem, the king, in like manner, puts upon his head the cap with the coronet; and, at these words, virga aurea traditionem, the king giveth the verge of gold and the rod into his hand; then is the rest of the patent read, wherein he pronounceth him duke; after which, the king giveth the patent to the duke to be kept.

The robes worn by a duke, at a coronation, consist of a mantle and surcoat of crimson velvet, lined with white taffeta, the mantle doubled from the neck to the elbow with ermine, having four rows of spots on each shoulder. His parliamentary robes are of fine scarlet cloth, lined with white taffeta, doubled with four guards of ermine at equal distances, with gold lace surmounting each guard, and tied up to the left shoulder with a ribbon; his cap is of crimson velvet, lined with ermine, having a gold tassel on each top; and his coronet, which is of gold, is set with eight strawberry leaves also of gold. See Pl. 20, fig. 7.

A duke may have in all places out of the king's or prince's presence, a cloth of estate hanging down within half a yard of the ground; and so may his duchess, who may have her train borne up by a baroness.

A duke is styled His Grace, and The Most Noble; and he is officially addressed by the crown, "Our right trusty and right entirely beloved Cousin;" with the addition of, "and Councillor," if he be a member of the privy council. Their eldest sons are, by the courtesy of England, styled Marquesses, though they are usually distinguished by their father's second title, whether it be marquis or earl; and the younger sons, lords, with the addition of their Christian names; as, Lord Thomas, Lord James, &c.; and they take place of viscounts, though not so privileged by law; and all dukes' daughters are styled ladies.

MARQUESS.

A MARQUESS, by the Saxons called markenrewe, and signified a governor, or ruler of marches, was formerly an officer appointed to guard the frontiers or limits of the kingdom. In England, the title was first conferred by Richard II. in 1383, upon Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, who was created Marquess of Dublin; and in the next year, Duke of Ireland. His grace was, however, attained and banished in 1388, when his honours became forfeited. The second creation of the same dignity occurred in the same reign, when John Beaufort, Earl of Somerset, (the eldest son of John of Gaunt) was created, on the 29th of September, 1397, Marquess of Dorset. From that period, this dignity appears to have remained dormant, till the reign of Edward VI.; but thenceforward it became a regular and common grade of nobility. A marquis is created by patent, and the descent regulated accordingly. The ceremony is the same as used in the creation of a duke, except such things as are necessary to be changed, he being led by a marquis, and the sword and cap borne by earls. The oath is the same as that of a duke.

The robes of a marquis, at a coronation, are of crimson velvet, lined with white taffeta, having four guards of ermine on the right side, and three on the left, placed at equal distances, each guard surmounted with gold lace; the robe is tied up to the left shoulder by a white ribbon; the cap and coronet as described at the term Coronet in the Glossary, and Pl. 30, fig. 8. He is styled Most Honourable,* and is officially addressed by the crown, "Our right trusty and entirely beloved Cousin." His eldest son, by the courtesy of England, is called earl or lord of a place; and takes place below all earls who are peers of the realm; but the younger sons only lord by their Christian names; as, Lord John, &c. His wife is below all countesses and above marquesses' daughters; and his eldest daughter ranks as a countess, but takes place beneath all countesses. The other daughters are styled ladies.

EARL.

THIS title is the most ancient of any now in use, and the only one, which, existing among the Saxons, has remained to the present time. With them, the title was annexed to a particular tract of land; and earldoms of counties were not only dignities of honour, but offices of justice, having the charge and custody of the county whereof they were earls; and, for assistance, had the deputy called vicecomes. It is now a mere title of distinction, and the government has devolved upon the sheriff. With these duties, expired, also, the necessity of confining the number of earls to that of counties; as a reference to the peerage will show, that towns, villages, and even private residences furnish titles of many of our present earls.

The first hereditary earldom, which was conferred by William the Conqueror, was that of Chester, to his nephew, Hugh Lupus, in 1070, to hold, as he held the crown, (by the sword) to enable him to keep the Welch in awe. The whole county of Durham, with the title of Earl of Northumberland, he gave to Walcher the bishop, in 1076, one of whose successors was hardy enough to take up arms against Richard I. by whom he was defeated and taken prisoner; and, upon the pope's demanding his enlargement, as a son of the church, the king sent the bishop's armour to Rome, upon which he wrote, "See if this be thy Son's Coat," which silenced his Holiness.

* Notwithstanding most authors, who have written on this subject, have styled a marquis "Most Noble," and Mr. Pory, in his Elements of Heraldry, in a note, thus expresses himself: "This is to be understood of a real marquis, whose proper title is Most Noble; which I purposely mention, lest any one should be led into a mistake, by not distinguishing a real marquis, i. e. by creation, from a nominal marquis, i. e. the eldest son of a duke: the latter is only styled Most Honourable." This is an error which ought to be rectified; for we have now before us, a letter from Ralph Bigland, Esq. Clarendieux, who says, "The style given to a marquis, in our official documents, is that of Most Honourable."

DIFFERENT DEGREES OF NOBILITY AND GENTRY.

... is created by patent, as follows. He is attired in the robes of an earl, being led between two earls, and the other great officers, all in their robes of estate; of which the first bears the sword and girdle; the second, the scepter; and the third, the cap and coronet: and after the king sits on the throne, the king sitting on the throne, the coronet is put on his head, and the cap and coronet put on him by the king, and the sword is delivered into his hand.

The coronation robes of an earl are similar to those of a duke and marquess, with the exception, that there are but three guards of ermine and gold lace: and his coronation is the same as theirs, with only this difference, it has but three spots upon each shoulder. Cap and coronet of an earl, see Glossary, and Pl. 30, fig. 9.

An earl, when not in the presence of a superior, is entitled to a coach of estate, fringed, but without pendants; and his coronation may have her train borne up by an esquire's wife.

An earl hath the title of lordship, and being written to, is styled Right Honourable; and is officially addressed by the crown, "Our right trusty and well beloved cousin;" an appellation as ancient as the reign of Henry IV. who, being father by his wife, mother, or sisters, actually related as allied to every earl in the kingdom, artfully acknowledged that connection in all his letters and other public acts; whence the usage has descended to his successors.

The title of an earl's wife is countess; and his eldest son, by the courtesy of England, is born a viscount, and is called lord of some place; but his younger sons have no title of peerage: all his daughters are ladies.

VISCOUNT.

THIS title formerly applied to the sheriff of a county, and was not used as a designation of nobility until the reign of Henry VI.; when this monarch created John Baron Beaumont, K. G. by letters patent, dated 12th Feb. 1440, Viscount Beaumont; a dignity which expired with his lordship's son and successor, in 1507. A viscountey is always created by patent, and descends according to the specified limitation. The honour was originally conferred as an advancement to barons, but afterwards with the barony; and, in modern times, it has been conferred without a barony; as in the instances of Viscount Leinster, Viscount Sidmouth, Viscount Goderich, &c.

A Viscount, at his creation, has a hood, surcoat, mantle, verge, cap, and coronet; and his mantle has two guards and a half, each having a plain white fur only, called miniver. His coronation mantle has three rows of spots on the right shoulder, and two on the left. The coronet and cap as explained in the Glossary, and Pl. 30, fig. 10.

A viscount hath the title of lordship; when written to, he is styled Right Honourable; and is officially addressed by the crown, "Our right trusty and well beloved Cousin." He has the privilege of having a cover of essay held under his cup when he drinks, and a travers in his own house. His lady is a viscountess, and may have her train borne by a woman in the presence of a countess, but out of it by a man. The eldest son has no title of peerage, nor are his daughters ladies; but his eldest son takes precedence of all gentry, and above the younger sons of earls, and eldest of barons.

BARONS SPIRITUAL BY TENURE.

ARCHBISHOPS.

THE two archbishops are called Most Reverend, and have the title of grace, and take precedence of all dukes that are not of blood royal; and the Archbishop of Canterbury of all the great officers of the crown; and the Archbishop of York, of all, except the lord chancellor. The former is styled Primate of all England; the latter, Primate of England, and is subject to Canterbury only. It is the duty of the Archbishop of Canterbury to crown the king; and hath prelates for his officers: the Bishop of London is his provincial dean; the Bishop of Winchester, his chancellor; the Bishop of Lincoln, his vice-chancellor; the Bishop of Salisbury, his preceptor; and the Bishop of Rochester, his chaplain. He hath the power of dispensation, in any case not contrary to the law of God; and on this right, is founded his power of granting special licenses to marry at any time or place; to hold two livings, and the like; and also his power of conferring any degrees in prejudice of the universities. He styles himself, "By Divine Providence." The Archbishop of York has the privilege of crowning the queen consort, and to be her perpetual chaplain. He and his bishops adopt the term, "By Divine Permission."

BISHOPS.

THE functions of a bishop may be considered as twofold; what belongs to his order, and what to his jurisdiction. To the episcopal order, belong the ceremonies of dedication, confirmation, and ordination: to the episcopal jurisdiction, by the statute law, belong the licensing of physicians, surgeons, and schoolmasters; the uniting of small parishes (although this last privilege is now peculiar to Norwich); assisting the civil magistrate in the execution of statutes relating to ecclesiastical matters, &c. Bishops take precedence of all other barons: among themselves, by a statute of Henry VIII. London, Durham, and Winchester, take precedence of the rest, who rank according to seniority of consecration. The Bishop of London precedes, as being bishop of the capital city of England, and provincial dean of Canterbury; the Bishop of Durham, as count palatine, and earl of Sedberg; and the Bishop of Winchester, as prelate of the order of the Garter. All bishops are called Right Reverend, and have the title of Lordship given them; and, being the fathers and guardians of the church, are styled Fathers in God.

Besides these bishops in England, we have also bishops of Quebec, Nova Scotia, and Calcutta; and, latterly, there have been consecrated bishops of Barbadoes and Jamaica.

A bishop's robe, in parliament, is of fine scarlet cloth, having a long train, and is doubled on the shoulders with miniver, edged with white ermine, as is the bosom; and when he goes to the house of lords, and the sovereign is there, his train is supported by four chaplains, to the door of that house; but then, by a red ribbon fixed to the end of the train, and tied in a loop, he supports it himself, the loop being put over his right wrist; having a four-square cap upon his head; and in that form he takes his seat on the king's right hand. They have a vote at the trial of a peer; but before sentence, they retire, and vote by proxy. They are free from arrests; and their persons may not be seized upon for contempt, but their temporalities only.

Archbishops and bishops of Ireland enjoy similar rank and privileges in that part of the United Kingdom, as the archbishops and bishops of England; and since the union in 1801, are represented in the house of peers by an archbishop and three bishops, elected every session of parliament; and not as the twenty-eight representative temporal peers, who are nominated for life.

BARONS TEMPORAL.

BARON is the most general and universal title of nobility. Its etymology is very uncertain. Mr. Tooke supposes, it is from the Anglo-Saxon, bairgan, to arm, to guard, to defend, to strengthen; which suggestion, if allowed, simply means a man of power, armed, and surrounded with abundant means of defence. It is said, the original name of this dignity in England was vavassour, which by the Saxons was changed into thane: and by the Normans into that of baron. It was anciently used in a more extended signification, to denote free-born men; and afterwards by the Normans, to signify the free citizens of towns and boroughs, as of the city of London, also of York, &c. The barons of the Cinque Ports retain their name unto this day. There were also persons of another description, to whom the same rank was extended. Formerly, when the higher nobility were almost independent of their sovereign, or were, rather, petty sovereigns themselves, and presented in their style of living a complete copy, on a smaller scale, of the royal court, it was customary with many of the nobles to have their train barons of their own creation: and this was principally the case in the counties palatine, when every earldom had under it ten barons, and every baron ten knights-fees; and that it was usual for such as had four knights-fees, to be promoted to the rank of baron. Lords of manors were, also, anciently, styled barons; but, from the gradual alteration in the form of government, and the decline of the feudal system, all those minor dignities became obsolete, and the title remained only to those who were created immediately by the king, and were considered peers of the realm, and entitled to sit in the upper house of parliament, which consisted of the archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and barons.

This title, in ancient records, was applied to all the nobility; because, regularly, all noblemen were barons, or had a barony annexed, though they had also higher dignities. But it has sometimes happened, that when an ancient baron has been raised to a new degree of peerage, in the course of a few generations, the two titles have descended differently; one, perhaps, to the male descendants; the other, to the heirs general; whereby the earldom or other superior title has subsisted without a barony; and there are also modern instances, where they have been created without annexing a barony. See Viscount. So that now, the rule does not hold universally, that all peers are barons.

BARONS BY TENURE, a dignity attached to the possession of certain lands, held, according to the feudal system, directly under the crown, and conditionally upon the performance of some honorary services to the king; such as attending him in the field and in the cabinet, and furnishing him with a stipulated quota of knights or men at arms; which quota was regulated by the territorial possessions of the baron; these possessions being divided into allotments, for each of which he was required to provide a knight armed cap-a-pie, whenever the sovereign commanded his presence in the field: hence, according to the number of warriors the feudal lord provided, he was said to possess so many knights-fees. But in the reign of King John, so large a body of these lords of the soil were found to have alienated their grants, and so many to have become impoverished in consequence, that it was found necessary to enact a law, declaring those personages who had retained their original tenures unspoiled, alone qualified to retain the title of baron; and degrading the less prudent to the rank of tenant in chief, or knights. It was subsequently discovered, however, that the title of baron could not thus easily be taken away; and it was then arranged, that the opulent lords should be styled barones majores, and the poor ones, barones minores; which continued from that period until the reign of Henry III.; when, in consequence of a quarrel between the king and Simon de Montfort, the prerogative of the crown regarding barons was settled by act of parliament passed, that, henceforward, no nobleman could sit in parliament without a writ of summons. But there was this material difference between the greater and lesser barons; these were summoned at the pleasure of the crown; those, as a matter of right. From this time, the privilege was entirely withdrawn from territorial lords: the barones majores alone appear to have assisted in the legislative councils of the nation. Barons by tenure have, however, long ceased to exist; and more than a century and half ago, (A. D. 1669) in the case of the Fitzwalter peerage, when Benjamin Mildmay was restored to that barony, in opposition to Robert Cheeke, the lord of the soil, whence the dignity was alleged to have sprung, the house of lords declared, "That baronies by tenure, having been discontinued for many ages, were not then in being, and so not fit to be revived, or to admit any pretence of right of succession." And recently, in 1805, in the case of the barony de Ros, claimed by the Duke of Rutland, as feudal lord, from the possession of Belvoir Castle, said to have been the fountain of the dignity, the house resolved, "That his grace was not entitled to the barony." And it was subsequently confirmed to the heiress-at-law, Lady Henry Fitzgerald.

There is, however, one earldom extant, that of Arundel, which the ducal house of Norfolk enjoys by the feudal tenure of Arundel Castle; but this, like other exceptions, only establishes the rule, as the honour endures solely by special act of parliament, passed in the third year of King Charles I. to barons by tenure succeeded.

BARONS BY WRIT, or persons elevated to the rank of nobility, by being summoned to attend the king in council, or parliament; which writs were of that description called brevia clausa, from being closed with yellow wax, and impressed with the great seal of England.

The first of these summonses upon record, appears to have been tested on the 24th of December, in the 40th year of Henry III.; from which period, no similar writ seems to have issued, until the 22nd year of Edward I. when about sixty persons were summoned to attend the king, "where-soever he might be, to advise on the affairs of the kingdom;" but, it has been questioned, whether that summons constituted a peer of parliament.

To establish a hereditary barony by writ, it was requisite, Sir William Blackstone was of opinion, that two writs of summons should be issued, and a sitting in two parliaments have taken place; but this great law luminary seems, upon this occasion, to have been under misapprehension; for, in the case of the barony of Clifton, there was but one writ and one sitting, and that barony was allowed. Baronies by writ are heritable by heirs male or female; but in the event of the demise of the baron without the former, and with more than one heiress, the barony then devolving conjointly upon the heiresses, it falls into abeyance amongst them, and so continues, until only one of the daughters, or the sole heir of one of the daughters, survives. The crown can, however, at any time, especially interfere, and terminate the abeyance in favour of any of the co-heirs; but it cannot alienate the barony from the representatives of the first baron. It is imperative that it be conferred upon one of these. The mode of terminating an abeyance in favour of a commoner, is by summoning the individual by the title of the barony which had been in abeyance. The course observed towards a peer of a higher dignity, is the issue of letters patent by the crown, in confirmation of the barony; and a similar course, that of patent, is adopted towards heiresses.

The mode of creating peers by writ of summons, has been, however, a long time discontinued; and the only writs now issued, are those to the eldest sons of dukes, marquesses, and earls, in their fathers' baronies; but such writs do not create heritable peerages. If, however, a writ of summons issue to the eldest son of a peer, as a baron, under a misapprehension that the barony had been vested in his father, then the writ is deemed a new creation, and the dignity is heritable as a barony by writ. This was established in 1796, by the decision regarding the barony of Strange, in which James Stanley had been summoned, in 1620, under the supposition that the barony had belonged to the father, William, sixth Earl of Derby; and again, in 1637, in the similar case of the barony of Clifford. The first writ of an elder son is stated to have issued in the 22nd year of King Edward IV. when Thomas Fitz-Alan was summoned to parliament, in the barony of his father, the Earl Arundel, as Baron Maltravers. As barons by tenure gave place to barons by writ, so the latter have been superseded by

BARONS BY PATENT. The first instance of these occurred in the reign of Richard II. when John Beauchamp, of Hult, was elevated to the peerage as Baron Beauchamp,

* There is an instance, in the reign of Charles I. of the son and heir of a baron, who possessed two baronies, having been summoned by parliament in one of them. The Hon. Conyers Darcy, son of Conyers, Baron of Darcy and Conyers, (who was subsequently created Earl of Holderness) was summoned to parliament in his father's barony of Conyers, in 1680.

of Kidderminster, by letters patent, dated the 10th of October, 1387. Lord Beauchamp, however, never took his seat in parliament, as he died in the same year, and was succeeded by his son, with whom the dignity expired in 1420. In old time, it was deemed necessary to invest with robes the newly created baron in open parliament; and so lately as the era of James I. that monarch, in person, solemnly inducted the barons created by patent in the 13th year of his reign, by enrobing each peer in scarlet, with a hood furred with miniver; but in the same year it was determined to discontinue those ceremonies in future, the legal advisers of the crown having declared that the delivery of the letters patent constituted a sufficient creation; and in patents of more modern times, the ceremony of public investiture is expressly dispensed with.

The ceremony of his admission into the house of peers is this: he is brought into the house between two barons, who conduct him to the lord chancellor; his patent or writ of summons being carried by the king at arms, who presents it kneeling to the chancellor, who reads it, then congratulates him on his becoming a member of the house of peers, and invests him with his parliamentary robe. The patent is then delivered to the clerk of the parliament, and the oaths are administered to the new peer, who is conducted to his seat on the baron's bench.

The coronation robes of a baron are the same as an earl's, except that he has only two rows of spots on each shoulder. In like manner, his parliamentary robes have but two guards of white fur, with as many rows of gold lace; in other respects, they are the same with those of other peers.

The coronet is a gold circle, on which are six pearls; it was assigned to barons by Charles II. after the Restoration. See Pl. 30, fig. 11. Previous to this time, the barons wore scarlet caps, turned up with ermine, and on the top a tassel of gold. The globes round the coronet, though called pearls, are always made of silver: his cap is the same as a viscount's. His style is Right Honourable; and when addressed, officially, by the crown, "Right trusty and well beloved."

PRIVILEGES OF THE PEERAGE.

PEERS are free from all arrests for debt, and cannot be outlawed in any civil action; nor can any attachment lie against their persons.

They are exempt from attending courts-leet, or sheriff's turns; or, in case of riot, the posse comitatus.

When arraigned for any criminal offence, it must be before their peers, who return a verdict, not upon oath, but upon honour.

Peers are tried in courts, erected especially for the purpose, in the centre of Westminster Hall, at the expense of the crown; which courts are pulled down, as soon as the investigation terminates.

By the law denominated scandalum magnatum, any man convicted of spreading a scandalous report regarding a peer of the realm, no matter whether true or false, is subject to an arbitrary fine, and to remain in prison until the same be discharged.

Peers have the privilege of sitting covered in courts of justice, during the proceedings.

Peers of parliament have the privilege of franking letters; but it is as members of parliament, not as peers.

THE BARONETAGE OF ENGLAND.

THIS dignity, which is hereditary, is conferred by patent under the great seal, and generally limited to the heirs male of the person so created, though sometimes entailed upon others in default of such issue, and was instituted at the suggestion of Sir Robert Cotton, by James I. A.D. 1611, in the 9th year of his reign. It is supposed to have originated from the barones minores, minor barons; but the title is of ancient standing both in England and France, and was used in the former for bannet, when it was meant to designate a knight banneret, who was a parliamentary baron; as in the statute of Richard II. by which every archbishop, &c. baron, baronet, knight of the shire, &c. is commanded, under penalty of amercement, or other punishment, according to the ancient usage, to appear in parliament. In the reign of Henry VI. we find that a juror challenged himself, because his ancestors had been baronets, seigneurs des parliaments. As knighthood, which had existed from the earliest period, and had been long antecedent to nobility, always implied the performance of certain specific services, it was deemed advisable, upon the institution of this hereditary equestrian order, to attach it to some particular conditions; and a rebellion happening to rage in the northern part of Ireland, called Ulster, at that period, each newly created baronet was obliged to pay into the exchequer a sum of money adequate to the maintenance, in Ireland, of thirty foot soldiers for three years, at eight-pence per day; which, with the official fees, amounted to nearly twelve hundred pounds. It was also required, that the candidate for the dignity should be a gentleman by birth, and in the possession of an unencumbered estate of one thousand pounds per annum. The number of baronets was first confined to two hundred, but the order is now only limited by the discretion of the crown.

They had several considerable privileges given them, with a habendum to them and their heirs male. Baronets, and the heirs male of their bodies, have place in the armies of the king, near the royal standard, for the defence of the same; and are allowed, in their funeral solemnities, two assistants of the body to support the pall, one principal mourner, and four assistants, the medium funeral between those of a baron and knight.

Baronets rank among themselves according to creation, and follow next to the younger sons of barons, taking precedence of all knights, as well of the Bath as knights bachelors, except those of the Garter, and knights bannerets, created by the King or Prince of Wales, under the royal banner, in open war. The title of Sir is prefixed to their Christian names, and the addition of Baronet follows their surnames; and their wives have the dignity of Lady, Madam, or Dame, according to the manner of speaking. His majesty covenants not to create any other degree, order, or dignity, between that of a baron and a baronet; and also by a clause in the patent, though they be not dubbed knights, yet both a baronet and his eldest son, or heir male apparent, being of full age, i.e. twenty-one years, can claim the honour of knighthood. The first English baronet was

Sir Nicholas Bacon, of Redgrave, in Suffolk, whose successor is therefore styled primus baronetorum Angliæ. If a baronet be named at an installation, as proxy for a knight of the Bath, it appears essential that he should be knighted for the occasion: thus, Sir George Osborne, Bart. was knighted by George III. The precedence of the wives, sons, and daughters of baronets is settled by the patent of creation; the wives ranking next to the wives of the younger sons of barons, the eldest sons after knights bachelors, and the younger sons after knights' eldest sons; the daughters claiming the same rank among women, as their brothers claim among men.

Baronets, for their greater distinction and honour, bear on their own paternal coats the arms of Ulster; viz. on an escutcheon ar. a sinister hand, erect, open, and coupé at the wrist, gu. See Pl. 30, fig. 22. And here it ought to be mentioned, that this escutcheon may be borne in the middle chief, fesse point, or any other place most convenient, to avoid confusion with the charges of the family arms; but when the shield contains several quarterings, this badge should be borne in the first or paternal coat, and not placed, as it sometimes is, upon the intersection, or partition of the shield, unless the baronet has two surnames, bearing arms for each quarterly, then it ought to be placed on the centre division of the four quarters.

BARONETS OF IRELAND.

IN Ireland, a hereditary dignity, somewhat similar to knighthood, appears to have been occasionally conferred in the earliest times; and the knights of Kerry and of Glyn are yet permitted to bear the distinctions bestowed on their ancestors by the ancient sovereigns of the country. The order of baronets, however, was likewise introduced here by James I. in the 19th year of his reign, for the same purpose, and with the same privileges, &c. within the kingdom of Ireland, as had been conferred on the like order in England; for which the Irish baronets paid the same fees into the treasury of Ireland. It was first conferred by letters patent, dated 30th of September, 1619, upon Sir Dominic Sarsfield, lord chief justice of the court of king's bench; and on the 14th of October, in the same year, Sir Francis Blundell, knight, then secretary for affairs of Ireland, was advanced to the same honour. Several more have been added, no number being limited; but since the Union in 1801, none have been created otherwise than as BARONETS OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Several authors have made efforts to give the armorial bearings of the Irish baronets, but without success, owing to this circumstance, viz. that no regular entry of the patents has been preserved in the heralds' office, in Dublin. This deficiency, it is hoped, will now be remedied, as the whole of the Irish baronets' arms, places of abode, dates of creation, &c. will be found in the body of this Work, and the Appendix, in strict alphabetical order; a task never before accomplished.

BARONETS OF SCOTLAND.

Baronet of Scotland, commonly called Nova Scotia Baronet, is also a degree of hereditary dignity, and was instituted by James I. for the purpose of encouraging the plantation and cultivation of the province of Nova Scotia, in America, the first settlement made by the Scots beyond the Atlantic. But that monarch deceasing, his son and successor, Charles I. soon after his accession, put the project into execution, and instituted the order, by creating the Hon. Robert Gordon, of Gordonstone, son of the Earl of Sutherland, a baronet of Nova Scotia, by patent, dated 20th of May, 1628, with remainder to his heirs male whatsoever; a limitation invariably granted to all Nova Scotia baronets, previous to the Restoration. In addition to the honours and privileges of the order, each baronet prior to the surrender of Nova Scotia to the French, had a grant of eighteen square miles of land in that province: three miles the one way, extending along the sea-shore or adjacent rivers, and six miles within the land, the other way. These grants were erected into baronies, with many ancient privileges, to their heirs and assigns, viz. exemption, when at the Castle Hill of Edinburgh, from the payment of the to be sufficient to consider the summer as the season of the which they were to hold, a Sir William Stewart, afterwards Earl of Sutherland, in that management, who should baronets their honours to the year 1628, and the year of the then, and afterwards to their heirs male for ever, and before of which the said baronets, and all other baronets called baronets, and all other baronets, except Sir William Stewart, the year of the Restoration in Nova Scotia, his heirs, then and afterwards, that the title of Sir should be retained to the said baronets, and Baronet added to the baronets in the baronets of England, the eldest sons of the said baronets, and their heirs, were entitled to the title of baronet, upon attaining the age of 21 years, or in the case of their eldest sons' wives should be entitled to the title of baronet, or Dame. His majesty was pleased to give every mark of dignity to this his order, that was years after its institution, he was pleased, on the 17th November, 1629, granting the privilege of wearing a ribbon and medal; and was pleased to direct to each of them by the king himself, and their heirs male, shall wear and bear their necks, in all time coming, an orange tan-coloured ribbon, thereon shall be pendent in an escutcheon, with an imperial crown above the escutcheon, with the motto, Fax mentis honeste gloria.
 All these privileges of the order, particularly that of wearing the medal, were confirmed at the convention of estates of the kingdom, on the 21st of July, 1630; and, in order to establish them on the most solid foundation, they were again confirmed in an act of parliament of Scotland, which met at Edinburgh, on the 28th of June, 1633. The badge of distinction belonging to this order, fell to the ground, with all the other honours of Scotland, during the usurpation of the Long Parliament and of Oliver Cromwell; and it continued generally, though not totally, in disuse at the Restoration.

Several meetings, to revive the use of the badge and ribbon, were held, particularly in the year 1725, (suggested by the revival of the order of the Bath) in 1734, and in 1775, when it was revived; and on the 30th of November, in that year, being St. Andrew's day, the baronets then in London, thirteen in number, appeared at court, wearing the badge and ribbon, for the first time since its revival. The premier baronet of Scotland, at present, is Sir Richard Strachan. Since the legislative union between England and Scotland, and Great Britain and Ireland, the separate orders of baronets have been superseded by one general institution of BARONETS OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

It is a curious circumstance, that this dignity was once conferred upon a female, Dame Mary Bolles, of Ashburton, who, in 1636, was elevated to the baronetcy of Scotland, with remainder to her heirs whatsoever.

The remark we made at the end of the Baronets of Ireland, is equally applicable here. But the deficiency in all authors upon this subject, owing to the want of regular entries in the register offices in Scotland, will be found amply supplied in the body of this work; as also with respect to the Nova Scotia Baronets.

ESQUIRES.

AN esquire is a title of honour above a gentleman, and below a knight; and was, originally, a person who attended a knight in time of war, and carried his shield; whence he is called, in French, escuyer; and in Latin, escutifer or armiger, a military kind of vassal, having liberty to bear a shield, and was therefore considered as a name of charge and office only. Records, however, state, that this degree, in the reign of Henry IV. was conferred by the king, by putting about the party's neck a collar of SS, and giving him a pair of silver spurs. On the accession of Henry V. a statute passed, ordaining that in all cases where process of outlawry lay, the addition of the estate, degree, or profession of the defendant, should be inserted. This made it necessary to ascertain who were entitled to this degree, which has therefore been defined under heads, viz. esquires of the king's body, limited to four, they keep the door of the king's bed-chamber, walk at a coronation, and have precedence of all knights' younger sons, the eldest sons of baronets, and also of all knights of the Bath, knights bachelors, and their heirs male of the right line; so also, the eldest sons of the younger sons of the peers of the realm, such as the king invests with collars of SS, as the kings at arms, heralds, serjeants at arms, &c. whose eldest sons may bear the title. Esquires to the knights of the Bath, are their attendants, on their installation. These must bear coat armour, according to the law of arms, and are esquires for life; and also their eldest sons are reputed to have the same privileges as the esquires of the king's body. Members of the lower house of parliament; sheriffs of counties, who are for life, in respect to the dignity of their office; justices of the peace, but only whilst they continue in the commission; and also all those who bear special office in the king's household, whilst they continue in that office; captains in the wars, recorded in the king's lists; counsellors at law; bachelors of divinity, law, and physic; and mayors of towns; these are all reputed esquires, or equal to esquires, though not really so: also the pennon-bearer to the king, who is a person that carries the flag or banner ending in a point or tip, whereon the arms of the king, either at war, or at a funeral, are painted; which office is equivalent to the degree of an esquire. The heads of ancient families are considered esquires by prescription. It is owing, perhaps, to the remnant of feudal privileges contained in the game laws, that the eldest sons of esquires are allowed to be qualified; though by a strange anomaly, esquires themselves, as such, are not.

There is a general opinion, that every gentleman of landed property, who has £300 a year, is an esquire, which is a vulgar error; for no money whatsoever, or landed property, will give a man properly this title, unless he come within the above rules.

GENTLEMEN.

THIS term originally comprehended all above the rank of yeomen; whereby even noblemen are properly called gentlemen. All who were entitled to coat armour, or whose ancestors had been freemen, were included in the word gentlemen. But it was more particularly applied to the lowest rank of these; because, not having any title of honour, for want of a specific term, it was necessary to employ the general one, to distinguish them from the ignoble, or plebeian. In times when the different ranks were more carefully distinguished, there were several shades of gentility. The first and most honourable were those who could boast of four generations of gentlemen, both in the paternal and maternal line: these were gentlemen by blood. If they could not prove this, but the contrary was not known within the memory of man, then they were gentlemen by prescription. It was, also, in the power of the king to raise any ignoble person to the rank of gentleman, by letters patent, conferring on him the right to bear coat armour; when this was done without any achievement, either in war or peace, the person thus ennobled was insultingly called, a gentleman of paper and wax. All orders of the king's household, not in a menial capacity, were considered as raised to the rank of gentlemen. All orders of ecclesiastical preferment constituted a claim to gentility; and also, any degree taken in the liberal sciences. In feudal times, gentility might be acquired by the purchase of a seignior, which had in any way lapsed to the king, and the new purchaser became entitled to bear the arms of the last possessor. There was yet another way in which gentility was sometimes obtained, and that was by adoption; as when a person, who was not of gentility, was adopted by one that was, and, as he succeeded to his property and name, was admitted as his offspring, and allowed to bear his arms.

YEOMEN.

THE designation of yeoman, from the Saxon word zemen, which signifies common, was perhaps more respectable than what is now generally understood by the appellation. A yeoman, properly so termed, is a freeholder, having lands of his own to live upon; and a carn of land, or a ploughland, which, in ancient times, was of the yearly value of five nobles, was the living of a stokeman, or yeoman, in legal proceedings called legales homines, common in writs of inquests. By divers statutes it hath been enacted, that none shall pass in any inquest, unless they had forty shillings freehold, in yearly revenue; (perhaps, according to the increase of money now, equal to more than forty pounds per annum); but by the statute of the 27th of Elizabeth, every juror must have forty pounds of lands. In a statute made 23rd Henry VI. concerning the election of knights for the parliament, it is ordered and expressly provided, "That no man shall be such knight, which standeth in the degree of a yeoman."

It appears in Lambert's Perambulation of Kent, p. 367, that the Saxon word telphionemen was given to the thane, or gentleman, because his life was valued at one thousand two hundred shillings; the lives of all men, in those days, being rated at certain sums of money: the price of the head of a churle, or yeoman, being taxed at two hundred shillings; the one was called a twelve hundred man, and the other, a twykind, or man of two hundred.

By the statute of 2nd Henry IV. cap. 27, it is, amongst other things, enacted, "That no yeoman shall take or wear any livery of any lord, upon pain of imprisonment, and to pay a fine at the king's will and pleasure." These yeomen were famous, in the days of our forefathers, for archery and manhood; and their skill and courage were eminently conspicuous in the victorious battles of Poitiers and Cressy.

Formerly, the yeomanry were not to be pressed to serve as soldiers in the wars, unless bound by tenure, which has long since been abolished; nor were the trained bands compelled to march out of the kingdom, nor to be transported beyond sea; a law which still holds good as to the militia of the kingdom, which may be said to be composed of the yeomen of the different counties; nor was, nor is, any man, even in the raising of these military forces, compelled to bear arms himself, if he find a substitute sufficiently qualified, according to the acts for regulating these bands.

As the nobility, gentry, &c. have certain privileges, so have the common people of England, beyond those of other nations; for in England, no man can be imprisoned, ousted of his possessions, or disseized of his freehold, without just order of law, and previous cause shown; and if imprisoned, he has, in most instances, a right to an habeas corpus, the bulwark of British liberty and of the rights of the people.

There are still official employments of great respectability, with the title of Yeomen annexed to them; such as the Yeomen of the King's Guard, the Yeoman of the Stirrup, the Yeoman of the Pantry, the Yeoman of the Scullery, and others; so called from ancient times. And there are likewise, Yeomen Priekers in the King's Hunt, Yeomen of the Sherriff's Court, &c. &c.

RULES OF PRECEDENCY AMONG MEN.

THAT persons of every degree take place according to the seniority of their creations, and not of years, unless they are descended from the blood-royal; in which case, they have place of all others of the same degree.

The younger sons of the preceding rank take place from the eldest sons of the next mediate: viz. the younger sons of dukes, from the eldest sons of earls, &c. Yet there are exceptions; as with officers of state, who, although they are not noblemen, take place above the nobility of higher degrees; so there are some persons, who for dignities in the church, degrees in the universities, and inns of courts, officers in the state or army, although they are neither knights nor gentlemen born, yet take place amongst them. Thus, all colonels and field-officers, who are honourable; as also the master of the ordnance, quarter-master-general, doctors of divinity, law, physic, and music; deans, chancellors, prebendaries, heads of colleges in universities, and serjeants at law, are, by courtesy, allowed place before ordinary esquires. And all bachelors of divinity, law, physic, and music; masters of arts, barristers in the inns of courts, lieutenant-colonels, majors, captains, and other commissioned military officers; and divers patent officers in the king's household, may equal, if not precede, any gentleman that has none of those qualifications.

In towns corporate, the inhabitants of cities are preferred to those of boroughs; and those who have borue magistracy, to all others. And herein a younger alderman, though knighted, or as being the elder knight, takes not precedence from a senior alderman; as was the case with Alderman Craven, who, though no knight, had place, as senior alderman, before all the rest, who were knights, at the coronation of King James. This is to be understood as to public meetings relating to the town; for, it is doubted, whether it will hold good in any neutral place. It has also been determined, in the earl marshal's court of honour, that all who have been Lord Mayors of London, shall every where take place of all knights bachelors, because they have been the king's lieutenants.

It is also quoted by Sir George Mackenzie, in his observations on precedency, that in the case of Sir John Crook, serjeant at law, it was adjudged by the judges in court, that such serjeants as were his seniors, though not knighted, should have preference, notwithstanding his knightood.

ARTICLE OF UNION REGARDING PRECEDENCY.

SCOTLAND.

ALL peers of Scotland shall be peers of Great Britain, and have rank next after the peers of the like degree in England, at the time of the Union, which commenced the 1st May, 1707, and before all peers of Great Britain, of the same degree, created after the Union.—23rd Art. of Union with Scotland, 5 Anne, ch. 8.

IRELAND.

THE lords of parliament, on the part of Ireland, shall have the same privileges as the lords on the part of Great Britain; and all lords spiritual of Ireland shall have rank next after the lords spiritual of the same rank of Great Britain, and shall enjoy the same privileges, except those depending upon sitting in the house of lords; and the temporal peers of Ireland shall have rank next after the peers of the like rank in Great Britain, at the time of the Union; and all peerages of Ireland, and of the United Kingdom, created after the Union, shall have rank according to creation; and all peerages of Great Britain and Ireland shall, in all other respects, be considered as peerages of the United Kingdom; and the peers of Ireland shall enjoy the same privileges, except those depending upon sitting in the house of lords.—Art. of Union with Ireland, 39 and 40, Geo. III. ch. 67.

PRECEDENCY AMONG WOMEN.

WOMEN, before marriage, have precedency by their father; with this difference between them and the male children, that the same precedency is due to all the daughters which belongs to the eldest; which is not so among the sons; and the reason of this disparity seems to be, that daughters all succeed equally, whereas the eldest son excludes all the rest.

By marriage, a woman participates in her husband's dignities; but none of the wife's dignities can come by marriage to her husband, but are to descend to her next heir.

If a woman have precedency by creation or birth, she retains the same, though she marry a commoner; but if a woman nobly born marry any peer, she shall take place according to the degree of her husband only, though she be a duke's daughter.

A woman, privileged by marriage with one of noble degree, shall retain the privilege due to her by her husband, though he should be degraded by forfeiture, &c.; for crimes are personal.

The wife of the eldest son of any degree takes place of the daughters of the same degree, who always have place immediately after the wives of such eldest sons; and both of them take place of the younger sons of the preceding degree; thus, the lady of the eldest son of an earl takes place of an earl's daughter; and both of them precede the wife of the younger son of a marquess. Also, the wife of any degree precedes the wife of the eldest son of the preceding degree; thus, the wife of a marquess precedes the wife of the eldest son of a duke.

Married women and widows are entitled to the same rank among each other, as their husbands respectively bear, or have borne, except such rank be merely professional or official; and unmarried women, to the same rank as their eldest brothers would bear among men, during the lives of their fathers.

ROYAL ARMS, BADGES, &c. OF ENGLAND,

FROM EGBERT, THE FIRST SAXON KING, TO HIS PRESENT MAJESTY GEORGE THE FOURTH.

SAXON LINE.

- 800 EGBERT, [the first King of England, before that period called Britain] az. a cross patonce or.
 837 ETHELWOLPH, az. a cross potent fitchée or.
 857 ETHELBALD. The same arms.
 858 ETHELBERT, az. a cross patonce, or pattée, or.
 873 ALFRED, chequy, or and purp. ; on a chief sa. a lion pass. guard. of the first: or, barry of five, gu. gu. and or, a pile counterchanged.
 900 EDWARD THE ELDER, [son of Alfred] az. a cross patonce betw. four martlets, or crowns, or.
 924 ATHELSTAN, [son of Edward] per saltier, gu. and az. ; on a mound, a cross botonnée or. Some omit the mound, and crown the cross.
 940 EDMUND, [brother to Athelstan] az. a cross pattée or. Other arms have been assigned, viz. az. a cross patonce betw. four martlets, or; and, also, az. three crowns, each transfixt with two arrows, saltierways, or.
 946 EDRED, [brother to Edmund] az. a cross pattée betw. four martlets, or.
 955 EDWIN, az. a cross pattée or.
 959 EDGAR, [brother to Edwin] az. a cross patonce betw. four martlets, or.
 975 EDWARD THE MARTYR, [son of Edgar] az. a cross patonce betw. four crowns or martlets, or.

- 978 ETHELRED, az. a cross patonce betw. four martlets, or.
 1016 EDMUND IRONSIDES, [son of Ethelred] az. a cross patonce or.

DANISH LINE.

- 1017 CANUTE, [son of Swain, King of Denmark] or, a cross gu. ; in the first and fourth quarters, semée of hearts gu. two lions pass. guard. az. ; second and third, gu. a lion ramp. or, supporting a battle-axe ar. : upon an escutcheon of pretence, az. three crowns or.
 1036 HAROLD, [second son of Canute, surnamed Harefoot] or, on a cross pattée gu. a lion pass. guard.
 1041 HARDICANUTE, [elder brother to Harold.] The same arms as Canute; though some authors assign to him, ar. a raven ppr.

SAXON LINE RESTORED.

- 1042 EDWARD THE CONFESSOR, az. a cross patonce betw. five martlets, or.
 1066 HAROLD, gu. crusily, two bars betw. six leopards' faces, or, three, two, and one.

NORMAN LINE.

- 1066 WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, gu. two lions pass. guard. or. Much controversy has arisen as to the bearings in these arms, which some maintain are improperly called lions. In support of their being such, Sandford, in his Genealogical History, b. i, p. 24, notes the story of John, the monk of Harmonstier, in Tourain, an author of the time; who relates, that when Henry I. chose Geoffrey Plantagenet, son of Foulk, Earl of Anjou, Tourain, and Main, to be his son-in-law, by marrying him to his only daughter and heir, Maud the Empress, and made him a Knight; after bathing and other solemnities, (pedes ejus salutaribus in superficie Leonculos aureos habentibus muniuntur) boots, embroidered with golden lyons, were drawn on his legs; and also, that (Clypeus Leoncules aureos imaginarios habens collo ejus suspenditur) a shield, with lyons of gold therein, was hung about his neck. Favine, lib. iii, p. 577, 578, and 579. A proof that this bearing was, at that early period, termed lions.
- 1087 WILLIAM II. surnamed Rufus, [second son of William the Conqueror.] The same arms.
- 1100 HENRY I. [third son of William the Conqueror.] The same arms.
- 1135 STEPHEN, said to have borne the same arms. And also, gu. three bodies of three lions pass. the necks with men's bodies, or, in form of the sign Sagittarius. By others, gu. a Sagittarius or. King Stephen is said to have adopted this bearing from the great assistance afforded him by the archers, and having entered the kingdom when the sun was in the sign Sagittarius. But on the great seal, the shield is plain, without any device, as may be seen in Sandford's Genealogical History.

SAXON LINE RESTORED.

- 1154 HENRY II. gu. two lions pass. guard. or; but after his marriage with Eleanor of Aquitaine, this king added a third lion, (the arms of Aquitaine being, gu. a lion or.) On the great seal, no arms appear; only the concave side of the shield being shown.
- 1189 RICHARD I. Before the crusade, this monarch's great seal shows but one half of the shield, the dexter side, with a lion ramp. sinister, from which it is inferred that he bore two lions combatant. After the expedition to the Holy Land, another great seal bears three lions; which, from this time, became the hereditary bearing of his successors, Kings of England. [From this crusade, may be dated the origin of arms in this kingdom, which by degrees became hereditary, but not fully established until the latter end of the reign of Henry III.] Motto, Dieu et mon droit. This monarch having defeated the French at Gisors, in the department of Eure, and late province of Normandy, A.D. 1198, and the king's parole on that day having been Dieu et mon droit, God and my right; his majesty adopted it, in memory of the victory, as the royal motto, and it has almost ever since been continued by succeeding sovereigns, as the motto of the royal arms of England.

- 1199 JOHN. The same arms. But before his elevation to the throne of England, when Earl of Mortagne, in Normandy, he bore only two lions.
- 1216 HENRY III. The same arms.
- 1272 EDWARD I. The same arms.
- 1307 EDWARD II. The same arms.
- 1327 EDWARD III. assumed the title of King of France, in right of his mother Isabel, daughter of Philip IV. King of France, the three sons of Philip, (Lewis, Philip, and Charles, successively Kings of France) dying without issue. Arms, quarterly; first and fourth, France, viz. az. semée of fleurs-de-lis or; second and third, England, gu. three lions pass. guard. or.—Crest, on a chapeau, a lion pass. guard. crowned, or. Edward III. was the first English monarch who bore a crest, which was afterwards continued by succeeding sovereigns to Edward VI. inclusive, upon their great seals. This monarch instituted the order of the Garter, which has been generally borne round the royal arms by succeeding monarchs; though it was not introduced upon the great seal till the time of Henry VIII. Badges, clouds ar. from which descend rays; and a trunk or stump of a tree, eradicated and coupé, or.
- 1377 RICHARD II. [son of Edward the Black Prince] used the same arms as his grandfather Edward III. upon his great seal; but having chosen St. Edward the Confessor as his patron, he impaled the arms of the Confessor (az. a cross ponce between four martlets, or,) with the arms of France and England quarterly. Richard II. was the first of the English monarchs who used supporters, which were two angels, and beneath the shield a white hart couchant, gorged with a gold coronet, and chained under a tree—a device from the arms of his mother, Joan, Countess of Kent, and which he used as a badge. This king likewise used other badges; viz. a peascod-branch, with the cods open, but the peas out; also, the sun in splendour, and the eradicated tree, coupé, or. In some instances, the arms of England were placed in the first quarter.

LINE OF LANCASTER.

- 1399 HENRY IV. This monarch seems to have usurped the great seal of his predecessor, Richard II. with his throue, merely erasing the name of Richard, and substituting his own; bearing the same arms, and sometimes England in the first quarter. The supporters assigned to him, which are somewhat doubtful, are, on the dexter side, a swan, gorged and lined; and on the sinister, an antelope, gorged and lined as the dexter. Badge, the rose gu. ensigned with a crown. He was the last king who bore semée of fleurs-de-lis for France. He used the tail of the fox as a badge or device, following, as Camden remarks, the advice of Lisander, "If the lion's skin were too short, to piece it out with a fox's case." See Camden's Remains, p. 215.

- 1412 HENRY V. The arms of France having been altered by the French King, limiting the number of fleurs-de-lis to three; this monarch likewise reduced them, still retaining France in the first and fourth quarters, and England in the second and third. When Prince of Wales, his supporters were two swans, each holding in the beak an ostrich feather and scroll; but upon ascending the throne, was the first English monarch who took for the dexter supporter, a lion ramp. guard. crowned or; the sinister supporter being an antelope, as borne by his predecessor, Henry IV. The badges of this king seem to have been, a beacon or, from which flames, of fire issue, ppr.: and also, the red rose, ensigned with the crown.
- 1422 HENRY VI. France and England, quarterly. Supporters, two antelopes ar. accolled with coronets, attired and chained or; as appears over the gate of Eton College; though, a tiger ramp. guard. or, semée of roundles, alternately sa. gu. az. and vert, with fire issuing from the mouth and ears, sometimes occur as the sinister supporter. His badge or device, was, two feathers, in saltier, ar.; and he likewise used the rose as a royal badge.

LINE OF YORK.

- 1460 EDWARD IV. France and England, quarterly. Supporters, dexter, a lion ramp. ar. the tail passing betw. the legs, and turned over the back; (one of the supporters of this king, as Earl of March;) sinister, a bull: a white hart was also borne. Badges, a falcon ar. within a fetterlock, closed, or, as Duke of York; a dragon, sejant, sa. crowned or, as Earl of Ulster; a bull sa. crowned and hooped or, for his Honour of Clare or Clarence; a white hart, attired, accolled with a coronet, and chained, or, on a mount vert, which he used in honour of King Richard II. it being his badge. A white rose rayonné or, and the sun in splendour or, were likewise two badges used by this king.
- 1483 EDWARD V. France and England, quarterly. Supporters, dexter, a lion ar.; (one of the supporters of the Earldom of March;) sinister, a hind ar. Badges, the white rose; and the falcon within the fetterlock, as borne by his father, Edward IV.
- 1483 RICHARD III. France and England, quarterly. Supporters, two boars ar. tusks and bristles or. The white boar was his cognizance. Badge, the white rose rayonné or.

THE FAMILIES UNITED.

- 1485 HENRY VII. France and England, quarterly. Supporters, dexter, a dragon gu.; (the ensign of Cadwallader, the last king of the Britains;) sinister, a greyhound ar. collared gu. Motto, Dieu et mon droit. Badges, a portcullis, to which he added the motto, Altera securitas; the red and white roses united, in allusion to the union in him of the two houses of York and Lancaster. And, to commemorate his being crowned, in Bosworth Field, with the diadem of King Richard, which was found after the battle, in a hawthorn-bush, he bore the hawthorn-bush with the crown in it, and the letters K. H. as a badge.

Note.—From the devices of the red dragon and portcullis, this monarch created the two pursuivants of arms, called Rouge Dragon, and Portcullis.

- 1509 HENRY VIII. France and England, quarterly. The supporters, in the beginning of this monarch's reign, were the same as those of his father, Henry VII.; but he afterwards discontinued the greyhound, and used the following supporters, dexter, a lion guard. and crowned, or, transposing the red dragon to the sinister. Motto, Dieu et mon droit. Badges, a red rose; the union roses, red and white; a fleur-de-lis or; a portcullis or; he likewise used a greyhound, current, collared, to show his descent from the royal house of York. He was the first monarch who encircled the royal arms within the garter, surmounted by the crown, upon the great seal.
- 1546 EDWARD VI. Arms, supporters, motto, and badges, the same as those of his father, Henry VIII.
- 1553 MARY. Arms after her marriage with King Philip. Those of King Philip being, party per fesse, the chief part quarterly of four pieces; first, Castile and Leon, quarterly; second, Aragon, impaling Sicily; third, as the second; fourth, as the first. The base part of the escutcheon also quarterly of four pieces; first, Austria, modern; second, Burgundy, modern; third, Burgundy, ancient; and fourth, Brabant; over all, an inescutcheon of Flanders and Tyrole, impaled. This achievement impaling France and England, quarterly: the arms of Queen Mary encircled by the garter. Supporters, dexter, an eagle: sinister, a lion ramp. crowned or. Badges, when Princess, she used both the red and white rose and a pomegranate knit together, to show her descent from the houses of Lancaster, York, and Spain; but when she came to the throne, by persuasion of the clergy, she bore, winged Time drawing Truth out of a Pit, with Veritas temporis filia; which motto appears on her first great seal, before marriage. The rose ensigned with a royal crown, seems to have been another badge used by this queen.
- 1558 ELIZABETH, France and England, quarterly, encircled by the garter. Supporters, dexter, the lion ramp. guard. crowned or; sinister, the red dragon, as borne by her father, Henry VIII. Badges, the red and white roses, the fleurs-de-lis, and the Irish harp, ensigned by the royal crown. This queen made use of several heroic devices, but most commonly that of sieve. The badge of Ireland seems, for the first time, to have been placed on the great seal in this queen's reign.

UNION OF THE TWO CROWNS.

- 1603 JAMES I. Arms, supporters, mottos, and badges, see STEWART, in the Alphabet. On the great seal appear banners of the arms of Cadwallader, the last king of the Britains, az. a cross pattée fitchée or; and the arms of King Edgar, az. a cross patonce betw. four martlets or; to show his descent from the blood royal, both Welsh and English.

- 1625 CHARLES I. Arms, supporters, mottoes, and badges, as borne by his father, James I. On the great seal is represented the standard of St. George, ar. a cross gu. supported by the lion of England and the standard of St. Andrew, being az. a saltier ar. upheld by the unicorn of Scotland; and, what is very remarkable, on the sides of the two great seals, used by this king, where he appears on horseback, he is riding towards the dexter, and not, as was usual with his royal predecessors, towards the sinister, which was resumed by his successor.
- 1648 CHARLES II. This monarch bore the same arms, &c. as his father, Charles I. and by warrant under his sign manual, dated 9th February, in the 13th year of his reign, directed that, for the future, the heir apparent to the crown, for the time being, should use and bear a coronet composed of crosses and fleurs-de-lis, with one arch, and in the midst a ball and cross, as in the royal diadem; and that his brother, James, Duke of York, the sons of the sovereign, and the immediate sons and brothers of his successors, Kings of England, should use coronets composed of crosses and fleurs-de-lis only; but that all their sons, respectively, having the title of duke, shall use coronets composed of crosses and flowers, or leaves, such as are used in the coronets of dukes not being of the blood royal.

- 1684 JAMES II. The same arms, &c. as his brother, Charles II.
- 1688 WILLIAM III. and QUEEN MARY. The same arms as James I. with an escutcheon of pretence, upon which are the arms of Nassau, viz. az. billettée or, a lion ramp. gold, encircled by the garter, and without any variation in the supporters. Motto, Je maintiendrai. The arms are thus borne on the great seal; but they are sometimes depicted otherwise, viz. impaling the arms as above described, bearing the escutcheon of pretence, with precisely the same arms without the inescutcheon, the whole encircled by the garter.

UNION OF THE TWO KINGDOMS.

- 1701 QUEEN ANNE. The same arms, &c. as James I. encircled by the garter. Motto, Semper eadem.
- 1714 GEORGE I. GEORGE II. GEORGE III. and GEORGE IV. See GUELPH, in the Alphabet.

INDEPENDENT STATES OF AMERICA.

BRAZIL,—Decree establishing a national coat of arms, and national flag for Brazil.

“The kingdom of Brazil, of which I am regent and perpetual defender, having declared its political emancipation, and being on the point of assuming, among the great family of nations, that place which belongs to it as a great state, free and independent, it is of the most pressing necessity that it should have a coat of arms, or escutcheous, distinct from those of Portugal and Algarves, until now omitted, and characteristic of the circumstances of this great and rich continent. And as I desire to preserve for Brazil the coat of arms given to the kingdom by the King, Don Emanuel, in commemoration of the first name bestowed upon it, when happily discovered; and to honour the nineteen provinces which are comprized between the two great rivers forming its natural boundaries, and the integrity of which I have sworn to maintain; I have been pleased, with the concurrence of my council of state, to determine as follows: The coat of arms of Brazil shall henceforth be, a sphere upon a red cross, and in a field of gold, with a circle of nineteen stars of az.; in the lower part a dragon, symbol of the house of Braganza; and in the upper part a royal crown. The mercantile flag shall be a parallelogram of gold, inscribed on a green quadrilateral figure, with a sceptre in the centre, upon the red cross.

“By order of the Prince Regent,

JOSÉ BONIFACIO DE ANDRADO E. SILVA, Minister and Secretary of State for the Affairs of Brazil, and the Foreign Affairs.

“Palace, 18th September, 1822.”

BUENOS AYRES, per fesse, az. and ar. from the dexter and sinister sides, an arm, issuant, fesseways, the hands united, grasping a staff, in pale, ppr. thereon the cap of Liberty, gu.

CHILI, az. in base a volcano and mountains, ppr.; in the middle chief point, a mullet, radiated, ar.—Crest, an eagle, wings expanded, ppr.

COLUMBIA.—General Congress of Columbia.

“Considering that, by the eleventh article of the fundamental law of the Republic, it is their duty to fix and make known the arms which hereafter are to distinguish the said Republic among the independent nations of the earth, I have thought proper to decree, and hereby do decree, as follows:—

Article 1. The armorial ensigns hereafter used, shall be two cornucopias filled with the fruits and flowers of the frigid, temperate, and torrid districts, surrounding the Columbian fasces, which shall be composed of a bundle of lances, and the battle-axe placed sideways, bows and arrows crossed in the centre, and tied below with a tri-coloured ribbon.

Done in the Palace of the General Congress of Columbia, in Rosario de Cúcuta, this 4th day of October, 1821; eleventh year of independence.

(Signed) JOSÉ IGNACIO DE MARQUES,
President of the Congress.
MIGUEL SANTAMARIA,
Deputy and Secretary.
FRANCISCO SOTO,
Deputy and Secretary.

Palace of Government in Rosario de Cúcuta, this 6th day of September, 1821; Eleventh year. Let the same be executed.

(Signed) FRANCISCO DE P. SANTANDA,
Vice-President of the Republic.
PEDRO GUAL, Minister.”

MEXICO, ar. on a rock, issuant from the sea in base, the nopal, or tuna-plant, thereon an eagle, in full aspect, wings expanded, the head towards the dexter, holding in the beak a snake or serpent, embowed, all ppr.

THE SEVERAL

WHICH HAVE BEEN INSTITUTED FROM THE EARLIEST TO THE PRESENT TIME;

TOGETHER WITH A

DESCRIPTION OF THEIR RESPECTIVE HABITS, COLLARS, BADGES, MOTTOS, &c.

KNIGHTHOOD is a degree of honour of very high antiquity; and, although not a hereditary title, was at first composed of men of the highest rank and the largest possessions, such having most to lose, and the least temptation to plunder. The association was at length strengthened by a solemn vow, and received the sanction of a religious ceremony; which caused it to be regarded with a kind of reverence, even by those against whom it was formed; and the admission into the order was deemed the highest honour, a distinction which princes themselves were proud to receive. Many extraordinary qualifications were required in a candidate, and many new ceremonies were added at his creation. After having fasted from sun-rise, confessed himself, and received the sacrament, he was dressed in white tunic, and placed by himself at a side-table, where he was neither to speak, smile, nor eat; whilst the knights and ladies, who were to perform the principal parts of the ceremony, were eating, drinking, and making merry, at the great table. At night, his armour was conveyed to the church, where the ceremony was performed; and here, having watched till the morning, he advanced with his sword hanging about his neck, and received the benediction of the priest. He then kneeled down before the lady or patroness, who was to put on his armour, who, being assisted by persons of the first rank, buckled on his spurs, put a helmet on his head, and accoutred him with a coat of mail, a cuirass, bracelets, cuisses, and gauntlets. Being thus armed cap-a-pie, the knights who dubbed him, struck him three times over the shoulder with the flat side of his sword, in the name of God, St. Michael, and St. George. He was then obliged to watch all night in his armour, with his sword girded, and his lance in his hand. From this time, the knight devoted himself to the redress of those wrongs, which "patient merit of the unworthy takes:" to secure merchants from the rapacious cruelty of banditti; and women from ravishers, to whose power they were, by the particular confusion of the times, continually exposed.

Chivalry never flourished so much as during the time of the Crusades. From those holy wars it followed that new fraternities of knighthood were invented, and gave rise to a number of orders connected with the object of the expedition. Sometimes a party of knights united for a purpose, which required common exertions; and, when the object was achieved, remained bound by the recollection of common dangers, and the evident advantages of co-operation; and the sovereign knew no better way to reward them, than by confirming their society, and granting them laws, privileges, and a common badge of distinction. To guard the holy sepulchre or the tomb of some favourite saint, afforded the employment and the name of many of those societies; and others originated with the prince, to commemorate a victory, or to secure the co-operation of a number of knights for some particular duty. Thus the order of Templars began with the union among themselves of some knights, the more effectually to further the cause in hand, and who were rewarded for their services with habitations near Solomon's Temple, from which they took their name. Again, the order of St. Catharine was, at first, but a party of knights bound together by the common resolution of defending the tomb of the saint, from whom they took their name. Some of those societies were purely military; and some, partly military and partly religious; such was the order of the Knights of Malta, which began in the monastery and hospital established in Jerusalem, for the advantage of pilgrims visiting the holy shrine.

Those to which the holy wars gave rise, were common to all the nations of Christendom, who were united by the same cause; but those which were instituted afterwards, by different sovereigns, in celebration of the marriage or accession of a prince, were intended more particularly for the encouragement of their own subjects; although foreigners were occasionally admitted, and especially kings complimented each other by an interchange of the honours of knighthood: thus, Henry II. sent his son to be knighted by Malcolm, King of Scotland; and Edward I. sent his, to the King of Castile. So prevalent was this custom, that there is scarce a prince in Europe, that has not thought fit to institute an order of knighthood. In this country, the permission of the king is necessary to publicly bearing a foreign order; and no English order can be granted but by the king; except the lord lieutenant of Ireland, who, in this respect, exercises the privilege of royalty.

That the spirit of chivalry sometimes rose to an extravagant height, and had often a pernicious tendency, must however be allowed. In Spain, under the influence of a romantic gallantry, it gave birth to a series of wild adventures; for the ardour of redressing wrongs seized many knights so powerfully, that, attended by esquires, they wandered about in search of objects, whose misfortunes and misery required their assistance and succour. And, as ladies more particularly engaged their attention, the relief of unfortunate damsels was the achievement they most courted. This was the rise of knight-errants, whose adventures produced so many romantic novels; but the love of the marvellous came to interfere; fancy was indulged in her wildest exaggerations; and poetry gave her charms to the most monstrous fictions, and to scenes the most unnatural and gigantic; until they were deservedly ridiculed in the character of Don Quixote, &c. In the train of Norman ambition, it extinguished the liberties of England, and deluged Italy with blood; and, at the call of superstition, and as the engine of papal power, it desolated Asia under the banner of the cross. But these ought not to be considered as arguments against an institution laudable in itself, and necessary at the time of its foundation; and those who pretend to despise it, the advocates of ancient barbarism, and of ancient rusticity, ought to remember, that chivalry not only taught mankind to carry the civilities of peace into the operations of war, and to mingle politeness with the use of the sword; but roused the soul from its lethargy; invigorated the human character, even while it softened it; and produced exploits which antiquity cannot parallel. Nor ought they to forget, that it gave variety, elegance, and pleasure, to the intercourse of life, by making women a more essential part of society; and is therefore entitled to our gratitude. Having said so much on chivalry, and also entered at some length, on its influences, &c. in the latter part of the first section in the History of Heraldry, to which the reader is referred, we shall now proceed to give a historical account of the several orders of knighthood, in strict alphabetical arrangement, collected from the best and latest authorities; together with a correct description of their Habits, Collars, Badges, Mottos, &c.

ACRE, ST. JOHN OF. See ST. JOHN OF ACRE.

ALCANTARA, a military order in Spain, deriving its origin from the order of St. Julian, or of the Pear-Tree, which was instituted at Pereiro, in the year 1156, under the protection of Ferdinand II. King of Leon, and ratified as a religious order by Pope Alexander III. in the year 1177. From that time, until the city of Alcantara was taken from the Moors, this order of knighthood continued to be known by the name of the order of St. Julian;

but Alphonso, the ninth King of Leon, after taking the city, made Martin Fernandez de Quintana, Grand Master of Calatrava, Governor of it; and, in a few years afterwards, the order of Calatrava gave the city and castle over to the order of St. Julian, then under the Grand Master, Nanno Fernandez, on condition that the same should be held and remain under the subjection of the Grand Master of Calatrava, and his successors.

Alcantara being thus made the chief seat of the order of St. Julian, the knights laid aside the old device of the pear-tree, by which they were distinguished, as well as by the appellation by which they were known, assuming the name of Knights of the Order of Alcantara. They remained subject to the order of Calatrava until the year 1411, when their Grand Master, Don Sanchez de Terreiro, being authorised by Pope Lucius II. threw off all obedience to the superior order, and became independent. After this, the order continued in great estimation, under the Grand Master, elected by the knights, and acquired vast possessions, until 1495, when Don Juan D'Estuniga, who was then Grand Master, being made a cardinal and an archbishop, resigned his office, which Pope Alexander VI. conferred on King Ferdinand of Arragon, and his Queen Isabella of Castile, annexing it unalienably to the Spanish crown for ever. Since that period, the kings of Spain have enjoyed the revenues of the Grand Master, and of the Commanderies, belonging to this order, of which they are called perpetual administrators. It still continues in very high estimation, and is seldom conferred but on persons of the most illustrious and ancient families. The badge of the order is a gold cross stony, enamelled green, and is worn pendent to a broad ribbon on the breast. See Pl. 1, fig. 1. The knights wear a mantle of red silk, on the left side of which there is, embroidered in silver, a star of five points: but this mantle is never worn, except on their great festival at Easter, or on other days of extraordinary ceremony.

ALLIANCE OF SWEDEN, an order instituted in 1527, by Gustavus, King of Sweden, on his marriage with the daughter of the Electeur of Brandenburg, but of which nothing more is known.

AMARANTA OF SWEDEN. This order was instituted in 1645, by Christina, Queen of Sweden, daughter of Gustavus Adolphus the Great, in honour of a lady of that name, equally celebrated for beauty and virtue; but the order did not survive the foundress. The ensign of this order was a jewel of gold composed of two A's joined together, adorned with diamonds on both sides, and set within a wreath of laurel-leaves, banded with white, and bearing the motto, Dolce nulla memoria; which was worn, either pendent to a gold chain, or a crimson or blue ribbon, at pleasure. ANNUNCIATION, in Savoy, an order instituted in 1355, by Amadeus VI. Count of Savoy, in memory of Amadeus I. who, by his famous defence of the island of Rhodes against the Turks, gained immortal renown, and achieved the arms since borne by the Dukes of Savoy; gu. a cross ar. It was first denominated the Order of the Collar, but Charles III. surnamed the Good, changed its designation to that of Annunciation, and directed that the mystery of the Annunciation of the blessed Virgin should be represented within a circle of gold, formed of true lovers' knots, pendent to the collar, which was to be of gold, weighing 200 gold crowns, composed of the letters F. E. K. T. intermixed with true lovers' knots, separated by fifteen roses of gold, five of them enamelled white, five red, and five party white and red, and edged with two thorns or. See Pl. 1, fig. 3; to the end of the centre rose is pendent by three gold chains, the badge, which is oval, encircled by true lovers' knots, the whole enamelled white; and on the oval is represented the salutation, as related by St. Luke, in proper colours. The letters F. E. K. T. have been variously interpreted; some say they are the initials of the words, Frappez, Entrez, Rampez, Tout, and hold, that Amadeus chose these words for his motto, when he instituted the order. Others explain them by the words, Fortitude, Ejus, Rhodum, Tenuit; in memory of the glorious action of Amadeus the Great, when he compelled the Saracens to raise the siege of Rhodes, in 1310: but Geicheron, in his History of the Royal House of Savoy, mentions a coin of Lewis of Savoy, Baron of Vaul, who died in 1301, upon which is the same motto, FERT, without points or separation of the letters. The knights, who must be of noble family and of the Roman Catholic religion, wear, in common, the badge pendent to three small chains of gold round the neck. The reigning King of Sardinia is Sovereign of the Order.

AVIS, an order of Portugal, instituted by Alphonso Henriques, King of Portugal, in 1142, as a reward for services at the siege of Lisbon, under Don Ferdinand Rodriguez de Monteyro, who was appointed Grand Master. They were at first called Nouvelle Milice, or the New Military; but in 1166, having taken Evora by surprise, the king conferred on them the government of that town, and commanded that they should thenceforward be called Knights of Evora. On the taking of Avis from the Moors, in 1181, it was granted to them, on condition that they should build a fort, and reside there: to which place they transplanted themselves, and from that time took the appellation of Freres d' Avis. In 1204, Pope Innocent III. confirmed this order, and it continued independent until 1213, when it became under subjection to the order of Calatrava, then under the Grand Master Don Roderigo Garzes de Assa, and it remained in vassalage until the time of its seventh Grand Master, Don John of Portugal, who, on deposing his brother and seizing the crown, threw off its subjection to the order of Calatrava. The badge of the order is, a cross froy enamelled vert, betw. each angle a fleur-de-lis or; it is worn pendent to a green ribbon round the neck. See Pl. 1, fig. 4. The same badge is embroidered on the left shoulder of the robe of state, which is of white satin.

In the year 1365, the Grand Mastership of this order was attached to the crown of Portugal; and in 1789, the then Queen divided the order into three classes, viz. six grand crosses, forty-nine commanders, leaving the number of knights unlimited. To the first and second class were likewise assigned a silver star of eight points, with the cross upon the centre, encircled by a fillet; on the top of which is a heart inflamed, which distinguishes the orders of Poland. See Pl. 1, fig. 13.

BACHELORS. This, although the lowest order of knighthood, is, nevertheless, the most ancient. It was formerly accounted the highest military dignity and the foundation of all other honours. Henry III. is said to have styled them Knights Bachelors, because the title is not hereditary, descending to the posterity, but dies with the person on whom it is conferred; and Mat. Paris informs us, that such knights were then known by a gold ring on their thumb, a chain of gold about their necks, and gilt spurs. They formerly held a certain proportion of land, by what was termed knights' service, and for which they were obliged to serve the king in his wars, at their own expenses, for the space of forty days. The value of a knight's fee (about which there have been various opinions) seems to have varied from twenty pounds to forty pounds per annum.

A Knight Bachelor, in old records, is indifferently styled Knight, Miles, Chevalier, Miles simplex, and from the privilege of adorning their armour and horses with gold, and wearing golden spurs, given to them at their creation, were termed Equites Aurati, Golden Knights. There were anciently two sorts of knighthood, or, what was then termed, courtly knighthood and sacred knighthood; the first performed by the king, or one commissioned by him, by feasts, and the giving of robes, arms, spurs, &c. and sometimes horse and armour; the other by sacred ceremonies, by bishops and abbots, who conferred the dignity of knighthood by solemn confession of sin, a vigil or watch in the church, receiving the sacrament, and offering the sword upon the altar, which was redeemed with a certain sum, and then, with many prayers, termed benedictiones ensis, (prayers of the sword) begirt upon the knight. But the multitude of knights thus made, soon brought about its prohibition, and the privilege of conferring knighthood solely vested in the crown.

The ceremony of simple knighthood was performed by the person kneeling before the king, who, with a stroke of the naked sword over the right shoulder, pronouncing the words, Sois chevalier, au nom Dieu; Rise up knight, in the name of God; followed by Avancez chevalier; but the command to rise is now given in English, with the addition of the christian and surname of the person thus knighted.

This title of honour, which was formerly military, has latterly been conferred indiscriminately upon persons in civil occupations, under various circumstances; which not only perverted its original institution, but lessened its reputation in England, although it is still accounted a respectable degree of honour here, as well as in foreign countries.

Clergymen, or any in the order of priesthood, are debarred the honour of knighthood of the sword or spurs, until they have laid aside their spiritual cures, although anciently they were allowed to partake of this dignity.

A knight should have the title of Sir prefixed to his christian and surname, with the addition of knight; and if a knight is ennobled by advancement to higher dignities, he should still retain the name of knight.

It is a rank of universal honour, and an acknowledged title in every kingdom or state, although higher degrees of hereditary dignity are considered merely local. Formerly the spurs and swords of knights were carried before them in their funerals, the former being hung at the staff of the standard, if the defunct had been knighted in the field.

All civil knights were formerly termed Miles et Milites, Knight or Knights of the Carpet, or Knights of the Green Cloth, to distinguish them from knights who were dubbed such for military service in the field or otherwise: but there is now no distinguishing mark to denote either, the ceremony and title are alike in both cases, and to which equal merit may be implied.

In the age of chivalry, all knights of whatsoever degree, or creation soever, were, according to their power, to excel in the following accomplishments: they were to be faithful, religious, just in engagements, valiant in enterprises, obedient to superiors, expert in military affairs, watchful and temperate, charitable to the poor, free from debauchery, no boasters, ready to help and defend ladies, especially widows and orphans, and to be ever in readiness, with horse and arms, to attend the commands of their sovereign in all wars, civil and foreign.

The ancient degradation of a knight, was a ceremony inflicted for the neglect of those duties, which was considered a crime of equal magnitude as to make war against the sovereign himself, and for that, or any other act of disloyalty and dishonour, the knight was apprehended, and, when armed cap-a-pie, placed upon a high scaffold in the church, and after the singing of some funeral psalm or dirge, as for the dead, the helmet was taken off, and then by degrees the whole armour, the heralds pronouncing, "This is the helmet, &c. of a disloyal miscreant," with many other ignoble ceremonies; he was then attached to a rope, and thrown from the elevation by twelve knights; and when brought before the altar, laid grovelling on the ground, the priest read over him a psalm of curses. But the more modern way of degradation was not so severe; every thing but his horse became forfeited; his spurs being cut from his heels, and being deprived of his sword, the herald then reversed his coat armour, to complete his degradation.

BAND, or SCARF. This Spanish order was instituted by Alphonsa XI. King of Spain, in 1330, at Burgos, the capital of Old Castile, who, having many enemies, created this order of knighthood for his better defence, making himself Master a little before his coronation. The knights were invested with a red ribbon, of the breadth of three inches, crossing the left shoulder, the badge from whence this order of knighthood derived its appellation. They were under no monastical restraint, like many of the orders, and none but younger sons of gentlemen of small fortunes were admitted into it: but they were under the necessity of proving that they had been in attendance upon the court for the term of ten years, or that they had fought three times, at least, against the Moors.

The number of knights was limited to twenty, and the statutes of the order were as follow:

1. That the knight of the band stand obliged to speak to the king for the defence of his country and good of the commonwealth.

2. That he must speak to the king nothing but pure truth, without lying or flattery, and must reveal whatsoever he hath heard, either against his person or the state.

3. A knight once convicted of lying, shall walk a month's space, without wearing a sword.

4. He is not to keep company but with martial men and soldiers, or such as are advanced to charges and dignities of his own quality, but not with mechanical artisans, and men of base and vile condition.

5. He must keep his faith and promise inviolably to and with all men, of what estate or quality soever they be.

6. He must be provided with arms and a horse well accoutred, under pain of forfeiting the title of his knighthood.

7. And on the same peril he standeth, if he be seen mounted on his horse without his band and sword.

8. He is not to make any complaint of wounds received by him in war, neither is he to vaunt of his valour or manhood.

9. He is not to make any account if he be mocked, scorned, or railed on by any body; but to have all his carriage discreet and grave, and wholly measured by the level of honesty.

10. He is not to use any gaming at cards or dice, and must not pledge or engage his habits, arms, or horse.

11. He must be courteous towards ladies and gentlemen, to whom he shall perform honour and service to his uttermost power.

12. If any quarrel happen between him and another knight of the band, he standeth bound to commit it to the arbitrament of other knights of the band, such as shall be appointed thereto.

13. Any knight that usurpeth to wear the band, without having received it from the king's hand, shall stand engaged to defend himself against two knights of the order of the band; and if it so happen that he have the victory, he may lawfully keep and maintain it: but if he be vanquished, he shall be banished from the court.

14. Every strange knight that winneth the prize in justs, tourneys, or other actions of arms, against the knights of the band, shall be received and admitted into the order.

15. Any knight of the band that setteth hand to his sword against another knight of the same order, shall be banished the court for two months' space, and during the term of two months after, he shall wear but a half band; but if he wound his companion, he shall remain imprisoned half a year, and is to be banished the court for another half year.

16. The king only is to be judge for the knights of the band.

17. All the knights of the band stand obliged to accompany the king at all times, when he shall go to war.

18. The knights of the said order shall wear the band when they march in war against the Moors only; but if their services shall be required any where else, then they shall abstain from wearing it.

19. All knights of the band are to meet together three several times of the year, that they may speak to the king for those things which necessarily concern the order, when it is appointed by the king. That they shall all be well mounted and armed; and these assemblies or meetings are to be in the months of April, September, and at Christmas.

20. They are to exercise justs, joco de canna, and pikes; also to manage their horses on such days as are ordained for them.

21. No knight shall remain in the court without serving some lady or gentlewoman, to enjoy her in marriage or otherwise in honour.

22. All knights of the band are bound to be present at such tourneys as shall be performed within two miles of the court.

23. If it so happen that a knight of the band do marry within twenty miles distance from the court, the other knights are to keep him company, and honour his spouse with presents, and perform actions of arms, as it becometh knights to do.

24. All the first sundays of every month, the knights are to be present at the palace and the grand hall royal, to exercise all kinds of arms before the king, without any malice, spleen, or heat of cholera.

25. Any knight being sick, or dying, is to be visited, exhorted, and comforted by his companions; and after his decease, the said companions are to attend at his funeral, and to wear mourning the space of a month, in which month they are to abstain from jousts and sports of arms.

The band of the knight deceased shall be delivered to the king by the other knights, who must intercede and move his majesty that one of the deceased knight's sons may be received into their order, or obtain of him some gift and recompense to his widow, for her more honourable maintenance in the degree of nobility, or for marriage of her daughters.

The order was long disused, but revived by Philip I. Regent of Spain, in the year 1700, who, according to Edmondson, was then grand master of the order.

BANNERET. This ancient and honourable military dignity, we find to have been adopted by several nations, and also differently applied by each. In Rome, towards the close of the fourteenth century, it was the name given to an officer or magistrate. The people of that city and throughout the territory of the church, during the disputes of the anti-popes, had formed a kind of republican government, where the whole power was lodged in the hands of a magistrate, called senator, and twelve heads of quarters called bannerets, by reason of the banners which each raised in his district. In Switzerland, the banneret was a civil officer, like the Gonfalonier in some of the Italian republics; and at Lausanne, the title was conferred on those magistrates who had the privilege of carrying the banner of that city, at the confederations of the cantons. In England, our historians are different in their accounts of it; that we must naturally conclude, that this dignity has been variously applied, at different periods. Those authors who wish for its greatest antiquity, attribute the institution of bannerets to Conan, lieutenant of Maximus, who commanded the Roman legions in England, under the empire of Gratian, in 383. This general, say they, revolting, divided England into forty cantons, and in these cantons distributed forty knights; to whom he gave a power of assembling, on occasion, under their several banners, as many of the effective men as were found in their respective districts; whence they are called bannerets. Edmondson says, without naming his authority, that bannerets were first created in 736, and their creation adopted by different European nations. Whilst Seldon states, the first account of this dignity of honour, to be in the reign of Edward I. However this may be, respecting dates, we are informed by history, that bannerets were an order of knights, or feudal lords, who, possessing not less than ten knights' fees, led their vassals to battle, under their own flag, or banner, when summoned thereto by the king; hence the name banneret. They were also called, in ancient writers, milites, vexilliferi, and vexillarii, bannerarii, banderisii, &c. There were two kinds of knights, great and little; the first were called bannerets, the second, bachelors; which see under that head. The first composed the upper nobility; the second, the middle. The banneret was a dignity allowed to march under his own flag, whereas the bachelarius eques followed that of another. To be qualified for a banneret, he must be a gentleman of family, and must have the power to raise, at least, twenty-eight armed men, with estate sufficient to support them; each man, besides his servant, had two horsemen to wait on him, armed, the one with a cross-bow, the other with a bow and hatchet.

Afterwards, we find that this honour of dignity was granted as a particular mark of distinction for some meritorious action performed, and was conferred in the field of battle, where such skill was displayed. The ceremony was as follows.

The king or his general, at the head of his army, draws up in order of battle, after a victory, under the royal standard displayed, attended by all the officers and nobility, received the knight, led between two other knights, carrying his pennon of arms in his hands, the heralds walking before him, who proclaimed his valiant achievements for which he had deserved to be made knight banneret, and to display his banner in the field; then the king or general says to him, advancetoy banneret, and caused the point of his pennon to be rent off; then the new knight banneret, having the trumpets sounding before him, with the nobility and officers bearing him company, was sent back to his tent, where they were all sumptuously entertained. The words pronounced by the herald to the king or his general, upon presenting the knight, were: "May it please your grace to understand that this gentleman hath shewed himself valiant in the field, and for so doing deserveth to be advanced to the degree of a knight banneret, as worthy from henceforth to bear a banner in the war." The heralds, who thus conducted him, received for their fees, three pounds, six shillings, and eight pence; and if he was before a knight bachelor, he then paid to the trumpeters twenty shillings.

This order, according to Spelman, was a middle one, between a baron and a simple knight, called sometimes, also, vexillarius minor to distinguish him from the greater, that is, from the baron, to whom alone properly belonged the jus vexilli, or privilege of a square flag. And also by statute of the 5th of Richard II. by which such bannerets were called to parliament by summons. They were allowed to bear their arms with supporters; took place of all baronets; and had knights bachelors and esquires to serve under them. Charles I. by letters patent, ordained that the wives of bannerets, and their heirs male, should have precedency, as well after as before the death of their husbands, if they should happen to survive; before the wives of all those, of whom the knights baronets and their heirs male had the precedency; and even before the wives of knights baronets. See Chamberlayne's Present State of Great Britain.

Bannerets have no particular badge worn upon their garments. In England, their arms were generally painted

... the degree of knight hood, as well in Normandy as in England. And Henry IV. on the day of his coronation, in the tower of London, conferred the degree upon the thirty-six esquires, who had watched all the night before, and had bathed themselves. And also we have a very particular detail of the ceremonies used in the creation of knights of the Bath, at the coronation of Henry V. And other historians afford ample proof, that it has been usual to create knights of the Bath, at, or previous to, Wales, and at the celebration of their nuptials, and those of the royal family, from that period to the time of Charles II.; who, previous to his coronation, created bear the arms of Hanover. At all future coronations, he shall precede the companions of this order, and shall carry and wear his crown, as our other kings of arms are obliged to do; which chain, escutcheon, rod, and crown, shall be of like materials, value, and weight, with those borne and used by our Garter principal king of arms, excepting only the variations herein specified. Besides the duties required of him in the former articles of these statutes, he shall diligently perform whatever the sovereign or great master shall further command.

The Register shall, with the greatest fidelity, enter all transactions whatsoever within the order, and the decrees and proceedings in every chapter, with the valiant exploits and achievements of the companions. In all ceremonies, he shall wear the like mantle and surcoat with the king of arms: and on his breast, hanging to a golden chain, an escutcheon enamelled, on a field azure, three imperial crowns or, having in the centre the representation of a book, bound gules, the leaves thereof or.

The Secretary shall prepare draughts of all instruments to be passed under the seal of this order, and engross them; and in all ceremonies of this order he shall wear the like mantle and surcoat as the register; and on his breast, hanging to a golden chain, an escutcheon enamelled, on a field azure, three imperial crowns or, having in the centre two pens placed in saltier.

The Gentleman Usher of the Scarlet Rod, surmounted with three imperial crowns, styled Brunswick Herald, in all ceremonies shall wear the same robe and surcoat with Bath king of arms; and at a golden chain about his neck, on an escutcheon azure, three imperial crowns or, hanging upon his breast: upon the other side to bear the impression of Charlemagne's crown. He shall have the custody of the door of the chapter-room and of our chapel founded by Henry VII. during the ceremonies relating to this order. Besides the duties enjoined in these statutes, it shall appertain to him to touch with his rod any companion that shall be convicted of any crime, contrary to the tenor of the statutes; and in case of a degradation, to pluck down the escutcheon of such knight, and to spurn it out of the chapel; and he shall also diligently execute whatever the sovereign or great master shall further enjoin, relating to the interests of this order.

The genealogist, Bath king of arms, register, secretary, and gentleman usher of the scarlet rod, who attend within the royal palace, for the service of this order, shall continually remain under the protection of the sovereign, and hereby declared to be servants of the sovereign's household; and shall enjoy all privileges and exemptions belonging, by right or custom, to the esquires of the sovereign, or to the gentlemen of his privy chamber; that their robes and ensigns shall be prepared at the charge of the sovereign, and be issued upon the warrants of the great master.

The Messenger is safely and expeditiously to convey all summonses, dispensations, letters, and all other instruments, to the companions; and who shall likewise collect the quarterly payments from the companions, the genealogist, king of arms, register, secretary, and usher of the order. He shall wear the same surcoat and badge as the esquires of the order; and on his breast, hanging to a golden chain, one imperial crown of gold. He shall also diligently execute whatever the sovereign or great master shall further enjoin him, relating to the interests of the order.

All these officers, at their admission, shall take their oaths, which shall be administered by the great master; that they shall yield obedience to the sovereign, and also to the great master, in such things as appertain to the order: that they shall not disclose the secrets of the order; and that they shall be faithful in the execution of their several offices.

His majesty was further pleased to ordain the then Bath king of arms, Gloucester king of arms, and principal herald of the parts of Wales, empowering the said Gloucester to grant arms and crests to persons residing within the dominions of Wales, either jointly with Garter, or by himself, with the consent and at the pleasure of the earl marshal or his deputy, for the time being; and that for the future, the office of Gloucester should be united with the office of Bath king of arms, whose title thereafter should be Bath king of arms of the most honourable military order of the Bath, and Gloucester king of arms, and principal herald of the parts of Wales; as also, that he, for the dignity of the order, should, in all assemblies, and at all times, have and take the place and precedence above and before all other provincial kings of arms whatever.

His majesty also allowed the chapel of Henry VII. to be the chapel of the order, and for their greater distinction and honour, to bear and use supporters to their arms, upon all occasions whatsoever. And also, that the master of the Jewel-house shall provide for every companion a collar of gold of thirty ounces, Troy weight; which collar shall be composed of nine imperial crowns of gold, and of eight gold roses and thistles issuing from a gold sceptre, (See Pl. 1, fig. 5) tied or linked with seventeen gold knots, enamelled white, representing the white laces mentioned in the ancient ceremonials of this order; which said collar, having the badge thereto pendent, the companions are and shall be obliged to wear upon all festivals, processions of installations, and other ceremonies relating to this order, and also upon such other feasts usually termed collar days; and that the said collar may, for the future, be represented upon pictures, limnings, sculptures, and monuments of these companions; which collar shall not be alienated for any cause whatever; but the executors or administrators of every deceased companion shall return the same, within three months, to the great master of this order. And also, that a banner shall be placed over the stall of each companion, after discharging the usual fees, consisting of two yards in length, and one and three quarters in breadth, fringed about with red and white silk; and that, in the lowest margin, the name and title of the companion shall be inscribed with letters of gold, upon a black ground; and that the crest, helmet and sword, shall likewise be affixed to the stall of every knight, and be removed in like manner as the plates; and that, after the deaths of the companions, these banners, crests, helmets, and swords, (being first offered in a solemn manner,) shall then be hung up about the pillars, or in some other convenient place, towards the west end of the abbey-church of Westminster, to remain to posterity, for the memorial of the deceased knights, as a public testimony of their honour.

Whereas, in case a war should happen in Europe, in order to be in a posture of defence against an invasion from foreign enemies, or a rebellion at home, that every companion of the said order, whenever he shall be summoned by the great master, under the seal of the order, in the sovereign's name, shall maintain, at his own proper cost and charge, four men at arms; and the great master shall maintain four trumpeters, for any number of days, not exceeding forty-two in any one year, and shall allow to each man at arms two shillings a day, for himself and horse, during the said term of forty-two days; after which term, if the said men at arms shall be continued in service, they and their officers shall be paid in the same manner as all other the horse of our armies of Great Britain are paid. That the said men at arms shall serve within any part of the realm which the sovereign shall think proper, but not out of the kingdom of Great Britain.

That the great master of the said order is, and always shall be, captain and commander-in-chief of the said men at arms. That the great master shall always appoint to lead and command the said men at arms: that is, one captain-lieutenant, who shall receive the daily pay of eight of the said men at arms; one lieutenant, the pay of seven; one sub-lieutenant, the pay of six; one ensign, that of four; one guidon, the pay of four; and three quarter-masters, who shall receive amongst them the daily pay of six of the said men at arms. That three of every four of the said men at arms, to be so paid by each of the said companions of the order, and the four trumpeters to be paid by the great master, shall be clothed in scarlet cloth coats and waistcoats, with brass buttons, having the arms of the order embroidered upon their right sleeve, a hat laced with gold, a blue cloak, a good and able horse, with bit-bridle, saddle, holster and bucket, cloak-straps, pectoral and crupper, and a housing of blue cloth, edged with gold lace, with the arms of the order embroidered in the corners of the housing, and a skin fixed to the pommel of the saddle, to cover the pistols; the whole at the sole charge of the companion, who is to pay the said men at arms. Each man to have a carbine, a case of pistols, a broad sword, an iron back and breast, and an iron scull-cap; and the officers each a case of pistols, a broad sword, an iron back and breast, and an iron scull-cap; the whole at the charge of the sovereign of the order.

That there shall be a standard of the said order, which shall be borne by the said men at arms, which standard shall be of blue silk, edged with a gold fringe, with the arms of the order embroidered on each side, to be provided by the great master of the wardrobe.

That the companions shall agree and appoint a proper person to be their treasurer, for the payment of the said men and their officers; and the companions shall pay into the hands of the said treasurer the forty-two days pay for the four men at arms, to be provided and paid by each companion, for which the said treasurer is to be accountable to the said companions.

That in case the great master, by sickness or otherwise, should be prevented from officiating in person, for the admission of a companion, then the said great master shall have the liberty of appointing one of the companions of the said order, to act as deputy; and in case he shall not appoint a deputy, then shall the eldest companion of the order present officiate as great master; nevertheless, to be accountable to the great master for all fees and profits of the order.

The apparel of a knight of the Bath, is a red fur coat, lined and edged with white, girded about with a white girdle, without any ornament thereon; the mantle is of the same colour and lining, made fast about the neck with a lace of white silk, having a pair of gloves tied therein, with tassels of silk and gold at the end; which mantle is adorned upon the left shoulder with the ensign of the order, being three imperial crowns or, surrounded with the ancient motto of this knighthood, Tria juncta in uno, wrought upon a circle gules; all upon a star of eight points silver, and under it the lace of white silk, heretofore worn by the knights of the Bath. They have red breeches and stockings, and have white hats, with a plume of white feathers in them.

The badge or cognizance of this order, is a rose issuing from the dexter side of a sceptre, and a thistle from the sinister; all between three imperial crowns, placed within the motto of the order; viz. Tria juncta in uno; the whole of pure gold, richly chased and pierced, which is worn pendent to a red ribbon, placed obliquely over the right shoulder, and brought to the left side. See Pl. 1, fig. 6.

The Ceremonial of the Knighthood, and Investiture of a Knight.

The dean, the knights, and the officers of the order attend in the Privy Chamber, in their mantles, collars, &c. and proceed into the sovereign's presence in the following order, making their usual reverences. Gentleman usher of the order, in his mantle, chain, and badge, bearing the scarlet rod. Register and secretary, in their mantles, chains, and badges. Deputy to Bath king of arms, in his mantle, chain, and badge, bearing the ribbon and badge of the order on a velvet cushion. Knights companions, and knights elect, according to their seniority; juniors first. The Bishop of Rochester, dean of the order, in his mantle, chain, and badge. Then, by the sovereign's command, the knight to be invested is introduced into the presence, by the two junior knights present, preceded by the gentleman usher of the order, with reverences as before.

The sword of state is then delivered to the sovereign; and the elect, kneeling, is knighted therewith; then the senior knight presents the ribbon and badge to the sovereign; his majesty puts them over the new knight's right shoulder, and, being thus invested, and having kissed his majesty's hand, the procession returns in the same order.

The Installation of the Knights.

The day being appointed for the installation of the knights elect, several of the knights companions, dressed in their surcoats, &c. as before described; the knights elect, in their surcoats, mantles, and spurs; and proxies of the absent knights elect, each bearing the mantle of his principal on his right arm; meet in the Prince's Chamber, at Westminster, where their respective esquires also attend, and go in procession to the south-east door of Westminster Abbey; from thence passing down the south side aisle, and turning through the last arch next the great west door, cross the middle aisle, and proceed up the north side aisle to King Henry VII.'s Chapel, in the following order:

Six men in crimson silk scarves, with long staves, to clear the way, uncovered.

Drums of his Majesty's Household.

Drum Majors.

Kettle-drums and trumpets.

Serjeant Trumpeter, with his mace.

Twelve Alms-men of the church of Westminster, two and two, in their gowns, having three imperial crowns embroidered upon that part which covers the right shoulder.

The Messenger of the order, in a surcoat of white silk, lined with red, having a hood of the same; and upon his right shoulder, the plain escutcheon of the order; az. three imperial crowns or.

Esquires of the Knights Elect, three and three, their caps in their hands.

Esquires of the Knights Companions, their caps on their heads.

Prebendaries of the church of Westminster, two and two, in white mantles, lined with red, having the like badge on their right shoulder.

Officers of arms.

Pursuivants, in their tabards.

Heralds, in their tabards and collars.

Provincial Kings of Arms, in their tabards, collars, and badges.

Proxies,

wearing the surcoat, and girt with the sword of the order, carrying the mantle on their right arms; without spurs, hat and feather; but walking with the bat in their hands.

Proxies

Knights Elect,

carrying their hats and feathers in their hands.

Knights Companions, in the full habit of the order, with white hats, adorned with a plume of white feathers, on their heads.

Gentleman Usher—Register—Secretary, each in his mantle and surcoat.

Bath King of Arms—Garter—Genealogist, in their mantles and surcoats, and badges of the order. The Bishop of Rochester, Dean of Westminster and Dean of the Order; in his mantle and surcoat, like the companions, with the badge of the order pendent to a red ribbon, carrying in his right hand the form of the oath and admonition, engrossed upon vellum.

The Great Master, in the full habit of the order, with the collar, as has been before described.

Twelve Yeomen of the Guards, who close the procession. The Staff-men enter the chapel, and place themselves three on each side. The drums, kettle-drums, and trumpets, divide at the doors of the chapel, and form a passage on the outside.

The Alms-men enter the chapel, and having made joint reverences, first to the altar, and then to the sovereign's stall, pass six on each side of Henry VII.'s tomb, to the recesses of the windows. The messenger, with like reverences, places himself between the altar and the stall of the junior knights. The esquires make like reverences together in the middle of the choir; and stand before their respective seats. The prebendaries, after like reverences, pass within the rails of the altar. The officers of arms, making like reverences together, in the middle of the choir, stand near the foot of the stall of the great master. The proxies, knights elect, and knights companions make their double reverences, singly or in pairs, according to the method observed in the procession, and retire under their respective banners; the knights companions being covered. The register, secretary, and usher, make their double reverences in the middle of the choir, and stand before their bench at the foot of the sovereign's stall. Garter, genealogist, and Bath, do the same, and stand before their bench. The dean does the same, and stands before his chair. The great master, having made his double reverences, stands under his banner, covered. The doors of the chapel are then closed, and the yeomen remain at the outside. The anthem being ended, Bath king of arms makes his double reverences in the middle of the choir, and then bows to the great master, who thereupon makes his double reverences under his banner, ascends into his stall, repeats his reverences, and sits down covered. Bath then bows to each of the senior knights, (if his companion be not present) who thereupon makes his double reverences, ascends into his stall, repeats his reverences, and sits down covered. Bath then bows to each knight and his companion, who make their double reverences, ascend their stalls, repeat their reverences, and sit down covered. In this manner all the knights companions take their stalls, except the two juniors, who remain under their banners, to offer the achievements of the deceased knights. The knights elect and proxies also remain under their banners. Then Bath, taking up the banner of the senior deceased knight, proceeds to the middle of the choir, where, being joined by Clarencieux and Norroy kings of arms, making their double reverences, bow to the great master. The great master thereupon descends from his stall, and making his double reverences, receives the banner from Bath; and being supported by Clarencieux and Norroy, carries it, with the point forwards, to the altar, where, with one reverence, he delivers it to the prebendaries; and on the return, making double reverences in the middle of the choir, is re-conducted to his stall by Clarencieux and Norroy; and the great master sits down covered; the organ and other instruments accompanying this part of the ceremony with the Dead March in Saul. Bath then takes up the banner of the next senior deceased knight; and standing between the door of the chapel and the middle of the choir, bows to the two junior knights companions; who, making their double reverences, receive the banner from Bath; and, being preceded by two heralds, carry it between them to the altar, deliver it to the prebendaries; and, making the usual reverences, return to Bath. The banners of all the other deceased knights are offered in like manner, by the two junior knights companions, preceded by two heralds; which being done, they ascend into their stalls, making their usual reverences, and sit down covered. Then Bath bows to the senior knight elect, or his proxy, who thereupon makes his double reverences; ascends into his stall, and stands therein, holding his bat in his hand. Then Bath bows to the knights elect and their companions, in pairs, who make their double reverences together, ascend their stalls; and stand therein, with their hats and feathers in their hands. In this manner all the knights and proxies ascend to their stalls. Then Bath carrying the book of the statutes and the great collar of the order on a cushion; having the takes in his left hand, and being followed by the dean, presents it to the middle of the choir, where they make their reverence together. The great master then makes his double reverence, descends from his stall, and being followed by the dean, enters into that of the knight; and, receiving the book from Bath, presents it to such knight, or his proxy, (if represented by proxy), and the dean administers the oath: viz. "You shall honour God above all things; you shall be steadfast in the faith of Christ; you shall love the king your sovereign lord, and him and his right defend to your power; you shall defend maidens, widows, and orphans, in their rights; and shall suffer no extortion, as far as you may prevent it; and of as great honour be this order unto you as ever it was to any of your progenitors or others." The great master then places him, or the proxy, in the seat, whereupon he rises up, and makes his double reverence; and then, the great master having saluted him, returns with Bath, the usher, and dean, to the middle of the choir, and he sits down, uncovered. The great master then proceeds to the stall of each knight, and receiving the book of the statutes from Bath, presents it to the knight, and the dean administers the oath; then the collar being delivered to the great master, he presents the knight thereunto, puts the hat and feather on his head, and places him on his seat, who, thereupon, rising up, and making his reverences, the great master salutes him, and then returns as before to the middle of the choir, and the knight sits down, covered. All the knights and proxies having been installed in this manner, the great master returns to his stall, where, making his reverence, he sits down covered. The officers then return to their seats, and the Sanctus being sung, the dean is returned to the altar, by the usher. During which time the knights put their hats and feathers on their heads before them. Upon the sentence of the dean, "Let your light so shine, &c." Bath proceeds to the middle of the choir, and making his double reverence to each knight and his companion, the knights and proxies, they put on their hats and feathers, the proxies remaining uncovered, and both making their double reverences together, descend into the middle of the choir, repeat their reverences, and withdraw under their banners. In this manner, all the knights are summoned, summoned from their stalls, and stand under their banners. The two provincial kings of arms, then making their reverences, wait on the great master, who, going from under his banner, makes a reverence towards the altar, but not to the sovereign's stall, and another reverence at the altar; where, taking off his hat and kneeling down, he makes his offering of gold and silver; then rising up, and putting on his hat, he returns, making his double reverences as he passes to his stall, wherein he repeats the like reverences, and sits down, placing his hat on the cushion before him. The rest of the knights, or proxies, singly, or with their companions, are, in like manner, conducted to the altar by the heralds; and after making their offerings, return, with the like reverences, to their stalls. Divine service being ended, the knights put on their hats and feathers; but the proxies remain uncovered, and Bath summoning them as before, under their banners; and the knights and proxies then installed, singly, or with their companions, are conducted by two heralds to the altar, as at the first offering; where each knight, standing, and drawing his sword, presents it to the dean, who receives it, and lays it on the altar. The knight then redeems it of the dean, who restores it with the admonition, according to the oath; viz. "By the oath you have this day taken, I exhort and admonish you to use your sword to the glory of God, the defence of the gospel, the maintenance of your sovereign's right and honour, and of all equity and justice, to the utmost of your power. So help you God." Which done, they return under their banners: and the coronation anthem, "God save the king," being sung, a procession is then made back in the same order it came, except that the prebendaries retire at the abbey-door, and the esquires and officers of arms, and officers of the order, when they come out of the church, are covered. Without the door of the abbey, the king's master cook makes the usual admonition to each companion; viz. "Sir, you know what great oath you have taken; which if you keep, it will be great honour to you: but if you break it, I shall be compelled, by my office, to hack off your spurs from your heels.

An esquire of the order is allowed to hunt and fish in the king's royalty, and is exempt, not only from serving the office of high sheriff, but any parochial office. To prevent any abuses in the claiming these privileges and exemptions, the following notification was inserted in the Gazette, in 1803, previously to the installation of twenty-two knights, attended by their esquires, sixty-six in number.

'It is hereby notified, that no exemplificate will be issued to any esquire, from his royal highness the duke of York, after the ensuing installation, until it shall be certified to his royal highness, by the genealogist, that the pedigree and coat armour of the several knights and their respective esquires have been entered in the genealogical books of the order, in obedience to the said statutes. Given at the Horse Guards, this 13th day of May, 1803; FREDERICK, acting as great master of the said most honourable military order of the Bath.'

Whitehall, 2 Jan. 1816.

Whereas, his royal highness the prince regent, acting in the name and on the behalf of his majesty, sovereign of the most honourable military order of the Bath, is desirous of commemorating the auspicious termination of the long and arduous contests in which this empire has been engaged, and of marking, in an especial manner, his gracious sense of the valour, perseverance, and devotion, manifested by the officers of his majesty's forces by sea and land; and whereas his royal highness has thought it fit, by virtue of the royal prerogative, and of the powers reserved to the sovereign, in the statutes of the said most honourable military order of the Bath, to advance the splendour and extend the limits of the said order, to the end that those officers, who have had the opportunities of signaling themselves by eminent services during the late war, may share in the honours of the said order, and that their names may be delivered down to remote posterity, accompanied by the marks of distinction, which they have so nobly earned.

The prince regent, therefore, acting in the name and on the behalf of his majesty, hath been graciously pleased to ordain as follows. First, The most honourable military order of the Bath shall, from this time forward, be composed of three classes, differing in their ranks and degrees of dignity. Second, The first class of the said order shall consist of knights grand crosses, which designation shall be substituted henceforward for that of knights companions; and from the date hereof, the present knights companions and extra knights of the said order, shall, in all acts, proceedings, and pleadings, be styled knights grand crosses of the most honourable military order of the Bath. Third, The number of the knights grand crosses shall not at any time, or upon any account whatever, exceed seventy-two; whereof there may be a number, not exceeding twelve, so nominated and appointed, in consideration of eminent services rendered to the state by British subjects, in civil and diplomatic employments. Fourth, The said knights grand crosses shall be subject to the same rules and ordinances, and have, hold, and enjoy, all and singular, the rights, privileges, immunities, and advantages, which the knights companions of the said order have hitherto held and enjoyed, by virtue of the statutes, excepting as far as may be altered or affected by the present decree. Fifth, It shall be lawful for all the present knights grand crosses, from and after the date hereof, to wear upon the left side of their upper vestments the star, or ensign of the said order, although such knight grand cross may not have been installed; and henceforward the said star, or ensign, shall be worn by each and every knight grand cross, immediately after his being so nominated and appointed, provided that it shall not be lawful for any knight grand cross to wear the collar of the said order until he shall have been formally installed, according to the statutes, or unless a dispensation has been granted for the non-observance of the ceremonial of installation. Sixth, In order to distinguish more particularly those officers of his majesty's forces, by sea and land, upon whom the first class of the said order hath already been, or may hereafter be conferred, in consideration of especial military services, such officers shall henceforth bear upon the ensign, or star, and likewise upon the badge of the order, the addition of a wreath of laurel, encircling the motto, and issuing from an escroll inscribed, Ich Dien. This distinction being of a military nature, it is not to be borne by the knights of the first class, upon whom the order shall have been, or may hereafter be conferred, for civil services. Seventh, The dignity of a knight grand cross of the most honourable order of the Bath shall, henceforth, upon no account be conferred upon any officer in his majesty's service, who shall not have obtained the rank of major-general in the army, or rear-admiral in the navy, except as to the twelve knights grand crosses, who may be nominated and appointed for civil services. Eighth, His royal highness the prince regent, acting in the name and on the behalf of his majesty, is pleased to declare and constitute the several knights grand crosses composing the first class of the most honourable military order of the Bath; viz. sixty military knights grand crosses, and twelve civil knights grand crosses. Ninth, And his royal highness the prince regent is further pleased to ordain and declare, that the princes of the blood royal, holding commissions as general officers in his majesty's army, or as flag-officers in the royal navy, now and hereafter, may be nominated and appointed knights grand crosses of the most honourable military order of the Bath, and shall not be included in the number to which the first class of the order is limited by the third article of the present instrument. Tenth, By virtue of the ordinance contained in the foregoing article, his royal highness the prince regent is pleased to declare the following princes of the blood royal to be knights grand crosses of the order of the Bath; viz. their royal highnesses the Dukes of Clarence, Kent, Cumberland, Cambridge, and his highness the Duke of Gloucester. Eleventh, The second class shall be composed of knights commanders, who shall have and enjoy, in all future solemnities and proceedings, place and precedence before all knights bachelors of the United Kingdom, and shall enjoy, all and singular, the rights, privileges, and immunities enjoyed by the said knights bachelors. Twelfth, Upon the first institution of the knights commanders, the number shall not exceed one hundred and eighty, exclusive of foreign officers holding British commissions, of whom a number, not exceeding ten, may be admitted into the second class, as honorary knights commanders. But, in the event of actions of signal distinction, or of future wars, the number may be increased by the appointment of officers, who shall be eligible according to the regulations and restrictions now established. Thirteenth, No person shall be eligible as a knight commander of the Bath, who does not actually hold, at the time of his nomination, a commission in his majesty's army or navy; such commission not being below the rank of lieutenant-colonel, in the army, or of post-captain, in the navy. Fourteenth, The knights commanders shall, from the publication of the present instrument, be entitled severally to assume the distinctive appellation of knighthood, and shall bear the badge and ensign, assigned as the distinctions of the second class of the order, on their being duly invested with the same; that is to say, each knight commander shall wear the appropriate badge, or cognizance, pendent by a red ribbon round the neck; and, for further honour and distinction, he shall wear the appropriate star, embroidered on the left side of his upper vestment. See Pl. 1, fig. 8. There shall also be affixed in the cathedral church of St. Peter, Westminster, escutcheons and banners of the arms of each knight commander, under which the name and title of such knight commander, with the date of his nomination, shall be inscribed. The knights commanders shall not be entitled to bear supporters, but they shall be permitted to encircle their arms with the red ribbon and badge, appropriated to the second class of the order of the Bath. And, for the greater honour of this class, no officer of his majesty's army or navy shall be nominated hereafter to the dignity of a knight grand cross, who shall not have been appointed previously a knight commander of the said most honourable order. Fifteenth, His royal highness the prince regent, acting in the name and on the behalf of his majesty, has been graciously pleased to appoint and nominate the officers of his majesty's naval and military forces, to be knights commanders of the most honourable military order of the Bath, as follows; viz. one hundred, and eighty, and ten, honorary knights commanders. Sixteenth, The third class of the most honourable military order of the Bath shall be composed of officers holding commissions in his majesty's service, by sea or land, who shall be styled companions of the said order. They shall not be entitled to the appellation, style, precedence, or privileges of commanders and companions.

Whitehall, June 4, 1815.

His royal highness the prince regent, acting in the name and in behalf of his majesty, has been graciously pleased to nominate and appoint three hundred and thirty-seven officers, belonging to his majesty's naval and military forces, to be companions of the most honourable military order of the Bath, in conformity with the ordinance relating to the third class of the said order, as published in the London Gazette of the 2 Jan. 1815.

His royal highness the prince regent has also been pleased, in the name and on behalf of his majesty, in pursuance of his majesty's ordinance of the 6 Jan. last, announced in the Gazette of the 10th of that month, to nominate and appoint twenty-six officers, belonging to the service of the East India Company, to be companions of the most honourable military order of the Bath.

Note.—The companions of the Bath take rank amongst themselves, according to their commissions in the navy and army, respectively.

Whitehall, 22 June, 1815.

His royal highness the prince regent hath been pleased, in the name and on the behalf of his majesty, to nominate and appoint Major-General Sir James Kempt, knight commander of the most honourable military order of the Bath, to be a knight grand cross of the said order, vice Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas Picton, deceased. And also to nominate and appoint three other officers to be knights commanders of the said order.

His royal highness the prince regent has further been pleased to nominate and appoint one hundred and nineteen officers to be companions of the said most honourable military order of the Bath, upon the recommendation of Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington, for their services in the battles fought upon the 16th and 18th of June last.

Carlton-House, 19 Oct. 1815.

This day, his royal highness the prince regent was pleased, in the name and on the behalf of his majesty, to invest Major-General Sir George Cooke with the ensigns of a knight commander of the most honourable military order of the Bath.

Form of Investiture.

By command of the prince regent, Sir George Cooke was conducted, with the usual reverences, to his royal highness, preceded by Sir George Nayler, the officer of arms attendant upon the knights commanders, bearing, upon a crimson velvet cushion, the star, ribbon, and badge of the second class of the order. The sword of state was, thereupon, delivered to the prince regent, and Sir George Cooke, kneeling, was knighted therewith; after which, he had the honour to kiss his royal highness's hand. Then his royal highness the prince regent, having received from the officer of arms the ribbon and badge of a knight commander, was pleased to invest Sir George Cooke with the same; the major general, having again had the honour to kiss the prince regent's hand, and having received from his royal highness the star of a knight commander, retired.

Whitehall, 20 Oct. 1815.

His royal highness the prince regent has been pleased, in the name and on the behalf of his majesty, to nominate and appoint his excellency the baron de Muffling, Major-General in the service of his majesty the King of Prussia, to be an honorary knight commander of the most honourable military order of the Bath.

Carlton-House, 27 Nov. 1815.

This day, his royal highness the Prince Regent was pleased, in the name and on the behalf of his majesty, to invest Rear-Admiral Sir Thomas Byam Martin, and Sir Josias Rowley, Bart. with the ensigns of a knight commander of the most honourable military order of the Bath.

Carlton-House, 4 Dec. 1815.

This day, Vice-Admiral Sir Herbert Sawyer was invested with the ensigns of a knight commander of the most honourable military order of the Bath; and the honour of knighthood was also conferred upon the following officers knights commanders: Lieutenant-Colonel Sir William Williams, and Sir Robert Arbuthnot.

Whitehall, 8 Dec. 1815.

His royal highness the prince regent, acting in the name and on the behalf of his majesty, has been graciously pleased to nominate and appoint twenty-six officers, belonging to his majesty's naval and military forces, and also six belonging to the East India Company, to be companions of the most honourable military order of the Bath.

The badge or cognizance of the order of the Bath, worn by the grand crosses, was altered upon the extension of the order, in 1815, and is now a golden cross of eight points, enamelled white, with a lion of England between the four principal angles; on the centre, a sceptre, erect, or, having on the side a rose, thistle, and shamrock, engrafted, between three imperial crowns, all proper, encircled with a ribbon gules; thereon the motto, Tria juncta in uno, in letters of gold, surrounded with a wreath of laurel-sprigs vert,* issuing from a scroll az. inscribed Ich Dien, in like letters of gold; and which badge is the size represented in Pl. 1, fig. 6. This badge, upon ordinary occasions, is worn pendent by a ring to a broad red ribbon, scarfways, over the right shoulder, hanging on the left side. On great festivals and collar days, this badge is worn pendent to a collar, composed alternately of imperial crowns of gold, as many knots or, enamelled white, and sceptres erect, engrafted with roses, thistles, and shamrocks, ppr.; the whole linked together with a double row of small gold links. See Pl. 1, fig. 5.

The star of the knights grand crosses, which is worn upon the left breast upon the upper garment, is of silver, formed with eight kinds of rays wavy, (the four in cross being somewhat longer than the four in saltier,) upon which is a gold cross also of eight points, formed like the badge, upon the centre of which are three imperial crowns ppr. upon a glory of silver rays issuing from the centre, surrounded with the ribbon gu. upon which is the motto of the order, Tria juncta in uno, in letters of gold, within a wreath of laurel-branches vert,* issuing from an escroll az. inscribed Ich Dien, the whole of the size represented in Pl. 1, fig. 7.

The badge worn by the second class, or knights commanders, is exactly similar to that worn by the grand crosses, but of smaller dimensions, and is worn pendent to a broad red ribbon round the neck.

The knights companions likewise wear, on the left side of their upper vestment, a silver cross of eight points, of a nearly similar form to the badge, with five pointed rays issuing from the four principal angles. Upon the centre of the star are three imperial crowns gold, surrounded with the red ribbon and motto, and encircled with a wreath of laurel-branches vert,* issuing from an azure scroll, inscribed Ich Dien, and which star is of the dimensions represented in Pl. 1, fig. 8.

The third class, or companions, wear a similar badge to the knights commanders, but somewhat smaller, pendent to a narrow red ribbon, from the button-hole on the left side, but without any star.

We scarcely need to add, that this order, both in the number of knights, and the brilliancy of its appearance, maintained its full splendour at the coronation of the fourth sovereign of the House of Brunswick.

BEAR. This order, sometimes called the order of St. Gall, was instituted by Frederick II. King of Sicily; who, being elected Emperor in 1213, and paying his devotions in the abbey of St. Gall, patron of Germany, instituted this order in honour of St. Ursus, one of the Thebaic Legion, martyred before the temple of the sun at Solcure; where, it is said, the body rests under the high altar, built by Bertha, with the Great Foot, wife of Charlemagne. The emperor Otho IV. granted to the Abbot of St. Gall the power of conferring this order: the ceremony whereof was usually performed on the 16th day of October, being the feast of St. Gall. The order flourished from its institution until the Revolution, by which the House of Austria lost the Swiss Cantons, when it was abolished; and it has now been extinct between three and four centuries. The collar of the order was a gold chain interlaced with a chaplet of oak-leaves, to which was pendent the badge, being a medal of gold enamelled white, thereon a bear sable, on a mount vert. See Pl. 1, fig. 9.

BBE. This order was instituted 4th June, 1703, at Sceaux, in France, by Louise of Bourbon, wife of Louis-Augustus of Bourbon, Duke of Maine, &c. to which, men, as well as women, were admitted. The ensign of the order is a medal of gold, bearing on one side the portrait of the foundress, and on the other a bee, with this motto, Je suis petite, mais mes picqueres sont profondes.

BLACK EAGLE, a Prussian order, instituted at Konigsberg, by Frederick, the third Elector of Brandenburg, and first King of Prussia, 14th January, 1701, the day previous to his coronation, that the knights might render that ceremony more brilliant, by appearing in their installation robes. By the statutes of this order, the number of the knights, exclusive of the princes of the blood, is limited to thirty, who must previously have been admitted into the order of Generosity, unless they are sovereign princes. The knights are required to prove their nobility for sixteen descents: the kings of Prussia are perpetual grand masters of the order; and the princes of the House of Brandenburg are born knights of it. The officers are, a chancellor, (who is also a knight,) a secretary, a master of the ceremonies, and a treasurer. The badge of the order is a gold cross of eight points, enamelled blue, having in the four principal angles the Prussian eagle, enamelled black, and on the centre the letters F. R. in a cypher. See Pl. 1, fig. 10. This badge, upon ordinary occasions, is worn pendent to a broad orange-coloured* watered ribbon, scarfways over the left shoulder; but on ceremonial days, pendent from a collar of gold composed of round pieces, each enamelled blue, with four cyphers of the letters FR.; the centre of the piece being set with a large diamond, encircled with the motto of the order, Suum cuique; and over each cypher, on the outer circle, a regal crown; all richly chased and intermixed alternately with eagles displayed, enamelled black, holding in each claw thunderbolts of gold. See Pl. 1, fig. 10. The knights also wear, embroidered on the left breast

* This distinction being of a military nature, is not borne by the knights of the grand crosses, knights commanders, nor companions, upon whom the honour is conferred for civil services, as mentioned in the foregoing order, dated 2nd January, 1815.

* This was in compliment to the memory of the founder's mother, who was born princess of Orange and Nassau, the eldest daughter of Frederick-Henry, Prince of Orange, and Stadtholder of the United Provinces.

of their upper garment, a silver star of eight points, the four central rays being somewhat longer than the four angular; on the middle is an orange-coloured circular escutcheon, and thereon a black eagle, with beak and claws of gold, wings expanded, the head surmounted with the regal diadem, holding in the dexter claw a crown of laurel; and in the sinister, a thunderbolt surrounded with a circle of silver, on the upper part of which is the motto, Suum cuique, in letters of gold; and on the lower part, are embroidered two branches of laurel, fructed, and tied together with a golden knot. See Pl. 1, fig. 16.

The habits, or robes, of this order, which are worn only on great solemnities and high festivals, are composed of a sky-blue velvet vest, with long sleeves; above this is worn a long carnation-coloured velvet mantle, with rich cords and tassels hanging down before. This mantle is lined with blue mohair; and above the vest is suspended the orange-coloured ribbon of the order. The star is embroidered on the left side of the mantle, and the great collar arranged above the whole.

The knights wear a black velvet hat, surrounded with a bandeau of diamonds, turned up on one side with a button and loop of brilliants, and adorned with white feathers.

The sword is of a particular shape, the pommel having neither bow nor guard, but made after the antique fashion, like those worn by peers at the ceremony of coronation, and state swords.

All the knights wear the same kind of robes, the trains of the mantles of princes being somewhat longer than the rest; the knights without distinction enjoy the rank of lieutenant-general of the king's forces, and surround the escutcheon of their family arms with the collar and badge of the order.

BLOOD OF OUR SAVIOUR. See REDEEMER.

BOURBON, or KNIGHTS OF THE THISTLE, called also Knights of our Lady, as well as Knights of Bourbon, and at first, Knights of the Golden Shield. The order was instituted in 1870, by Louis the Good, Duke of Bourbon, in honour of the Virgin Mary, for twenty-six knights, but became extinct soon after. Their motto was Allen, or Allons, and on the collar of the order the word Esperance. The collar was of gold, weighing ten marks, fastening behind with a gold buckle; it was formed of whole lozenges, and a double orle of half lozenges, enamelled green, and filled with fleurs-de-lis of gold, the whole lozenges bearing the word Esperance, in single letters, enamelled red, thrice repeated: pendent to the collar, an oval badge, enamelled green and red, and thereon the image of the Virgin, encompassed by the sun or, and crowned with twelve stars of silver, with a crescent of the same under her feet; her garments enamelled purple and sky-colour; and at the bottom of the badge a green thistle. See Pl. 1, fig. 14. It was first instituted under the title of the Golden Shield, upon the return of Louis II. Duke of Bourbon, from England, where he had remained seven years, as one of the hostages for John, King of France; and each knight, upon his election into the order, received a golden shield with the device, Esperance, traversed with a band set with pearls, on which were embroidered the words Allen, Allen, which implied, Allons tous ensemble au service de Dieu, et unissons nous pour la defense de notre pays; i. e. Let us go together to the service of God, and unite our- selves for the service of our country. The habit of the order was of blue silk, lined with red satin, and embroidered with gold.

BELICIAN, or ST. BRIDGET, of Sweden. This order was instituted in 1306, by Queen Bridget, who was afterwards canonized, and though approved by Pope Urban VIII. it was soon after discontinued, and never revived. The badge of the order was a cross of eight points, and between the base points a flame of fire proper, embroidered on a short white robe. See Pl. 6, fig. 20.

BROOM-FLOWER IN THE HUSK, an order instituted by Louis IX. commonly called St. Louis, in 1234, at Sens, on his marriage with Margaret, eldest daughter of Raymond Berengarius, Count of Provence, the king having chosen the broom-flower, the emblem of humility, as the badge of the order, adopting the suitable motto, Exaltat humiles. During the reign of the founder, this order was highly esteemed, and conferred only on princes of the blood royal, and some of the first nobility; but soon after his death, it fell into disrepute, and became finally extinct in the fifteenth century. The habit was a cloak of white damask, with a violet-coloured hood; and the collar was composed of broom-flowers and husks, enamelled in proper colours, with fleurs-de-lis of gold set in lozenges, enamelled white, and pendent thereto a cross flory gold. See Pl. 1, fig. 15.

BURGUNDIAN CROSS, in Tunis, an order instituted on the feast of St. Mary Magdalen, in 1585, by Charles V. Emperor of Germany and King of Spain, after he had restored Mulleassus, King of Tunis, to his kingdom, to reward those commanders who had signalized themselves in the victory. On the above day he made his pompous entry into Tunis, habited in the coat which he usually wore in battle, whereon was embroidered a Burgundian cross, and which cross he made the badge of the order, adding a steel striking sparks of fire out of a flint, with the inscription, Barbaria; and for greater ornament, ordained that such badge should be suspended from a collar of gold.

CALATRAVA, a military order of Spain, instituted by Sancho, the third King of Castile, in 1158, and confirmed by Pope Alexander III. in 1164, derived its appellation from the castle of Calatrava, an important fortress in Andalusia, taken from the Moors, after 400 years possession, and given to the knights templars, who, being unable to maintain the possession of it, restored it to the king, who intrusted the defence of it to Don Raymond, a native of Bureva, in the kingdom of Navarre, then Abbot of St. Mary of Hitero, a convent of the Cistercian order, through whose valour and enterprising spirit, aided by persons of considerable note, it was successfully defended, and bestowed on them by the king, and thus the order of Calatrava was first instituted. Its numbers were much augmented under Alphonsus the Noble, King of Castile; and the knights soliciting the nomination of a grand master, Don Garcias de Reden was the first invested with that dignity. Pope Innocent III. confirmed the order in 1193; but their numbers, strength, influence, and possessions, were so considerable as to render them objects of the jealousy of the crown, to which at length their revenues and the office of grand master were unalienably annexed by Pope Innocent VIII. Don Garcias Lopez de Pardilla was the last grand master canonically elected by the knights. After his death, in 1480, Ferdinand and Isabella annexed the grand mastership to the crown of Castile.

At their first institution, the knights wore a white robe and a scapulary, such as were worn by the Cistercians; but Pope Benedict XIII. by dispensation, exempted them from wearing that habit; and Paul III. granted them permission to marry once. The order now possesses eighty commanderies in various parts of the Spanish dominions.

The habit of ceremony is a mantle of white silk, tied with a cord and tassels, like those of the Garter, and on the left arm a cross flory, embroidered gu. The badge is a like cross, worn at the breast, pendent from a broad red ribbon. See Pl. 2, fig. 12.

CALATRAVA, a religious order for ladies, instituted in 1219, by Donna Gazelez Maria Yonnes. It bore the same relation to the foregoing military order for men, as the religious and female order of St. James did to the military branch of it, described in that order of knighthood. The badge was similar to that worn by the military order of Calatrava. See Pl. 2, fig. 12.

CATHARINE, ST. See ST. CATHARINE.

CELESTIAL COLLAR OF THE HOLY ROSARY, a religious order for ladies, instituted in France, at the request of Father Francis Arnoul, a Dominican, by Queen Anne of Austria, widow to Louis XIII. King of France, and mother of Louis XIV. for fifty young ladies of the first families in France. The collar of the order was composed of a blue ribbon, enriched with white, red, and maiden-blush roses, interlaced with the capital letters A V, in cypher, affixed thereunto; and pendent at the breast, by a silk cordon, a cross of eight points pointée, and in each angle a fleur-de-lis: on the centre, upon one side, was enamelled the image of the Virgin Mary; and on the reverse, that of St. Dominick. See Pl. 2, fig. 2.

CHASE. The order of St. Hubert, or the Chase, in Wurtemberg, was first instituted in 1702, by Charles Frederick, Duke of Wurtemberg; renewed in 1711, by Duke Eberhard-Louis; and finally confirmed in 1740. The badge of the order was, a gold cross of eight points, enamelled red; in the four principal angles, between the branches of the cross, is an eagle, displayed, gold; and between the points, at the extremity of each limb, a bugle or hunting horn: in the middle of the cross, is a small green enamelled escutcheon, upon the centre of which is the letter W in gold, surmounted with a ducal hat of crimson velvet, turned up ermine. This badge is worn pendent to a broad scarlet-coloured watered ribbon, edged with yellow, passing scarfways over the left shoulder to the right side; and on the left side of the outer garment, a silver embroidered star of eight points, the four central rays being somewhat longer than those which occupy the angles; in the middle is the badge of the order, with a small white escutcheon; on the centre of which is an eagle, displayed, sable, charged on the breast with the letter W in gold, and ensigned with a ducal hat or chapeau; the whole badge surrounded by a circle of green, bearing the motto, Amicitia virtutisque fœdus, embroidered in letters gold. On great solemnities, the badge is worn pendent from a collar composed of links, as follow: the first represents an eagle of gold and black enamel, with wings expanded: the second, a green enamelled shield of gold, of a circular form, on which was the letter W, ensigned with a ducal chapeau; and the third is likewise composed of a circular shield, on which are three hunting or bugle-horns, set in a triangular form, and slung together; these links are united with small chains, and repeated alternately in the formation of the collar.

The great festival was on the 3rd of Nov. being the feast of St. Hubert, which was annually celebrated at Ludwigsburg.

In 1806, Frederick I. King of Wurtemberg (the duchy having been erected into a kingdom) renewed this order, gave it new statutes, and denominated it The Royal of the Golden Eagle, which it now bears. The badge, star, and collar, at the same time, received some little alteration, by the introduction of F. R. in a cypher, assigned with the royal crown, instead of the W. and ducal chapeau; and at the bottom of the badge is suspended a small circle, with the cypher and crown. See Pl. 2, fig. 1, 7, and 6. The sovereign is the great master; and the order consists of one class only, with the title of knights, and their number is fixed at fifty, exclusive of the members of the royal family and foreigners.

CHARLES THE THIRD, or THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION. This order was instituted 19 Sept. 1771, by Charles III. King of Spain, in commemoration of the birth of an infant, and approved by Pope Clement XV. 21st Feb. 1772. The badge of the order is a star of eight points, of the Maltese form, enamelled white, and edged with gold, the two upper points surmounted with the regal crown of Spain chased in gold, and in the four angles as many fleurs-de-lis; on the centre of the cross, the image of the Virgin Mary, enamelled in white flowing robes, with an azure mantle: and on the reverse the letters C O, enclosing the number III. in the centre, surrounded with the motto, Virtuti et Merito, in Roman characters. This order was formerly divided into four classes. The knights styled grand crosses wearing the jewel, or badge, pendent from a broad sky-blue watered ribbon, with a white border, worn scarfways over the right shoulder, with a star of silver on the left side of the upper garment, formed like the badge, with the image of the Virgin in the centre. The knights of the second class wearing the badge in the same manner, but without the star; and the third and fourth classes, a small badge from the coat button-hole, suspended from a narrow ribbon of like colour as the higher class; the third class being called knights pensioners, and receiving an annual income from the treasury of the order, which the fourth class did not enjoy. The order was greatly enriched by the king, who granted thereto the vast estates of the House of Ximenes, which reverted to that family upon the extinction of the order of the Oak of Navarre, instituted by Don Garcias Ximenes in 722, and devolved to the crown on the death of the last survivor of that family. This order was of great estimation, and by express command of the king, who was the founder, ranked immediately after the order of the Golden Fleece, (which his majesty conferred, as heir-general, to the Houses of Burgundy and Spanish Austria) and preceding the orders of Calatrava, Alcantara, St. James, and Montesa, although of much greater antiquity and not less illustrious.

Charles IV. made some alterations in the statutes, by decree of the 12th of June, 1804; and the order is now composed of sixty knights grand crosses, exclusive of the great master and the royal family, two hundred knights pensioners, (who receive annually 4000 reals,) and an indefinite number of an inferior class. The secular officers are, a chancellor, a secretary, a treasurer, and a master of ceremonies.

By a decree of the 25th April, 1815, King Ferdinand VII. granted to the knights pensioners the privilege of wearing, in addition to the badge suspended by a ribbon to the button-hole, a star embroidered in silver, (See Pl. 2, fig. 4, 6, 9.) to be worn on the left side of their upper garments.

On ceremonial days, the members of the order wear a collar. See Pl. 2, fig. 16.

CHRIST, of Portugal. This military order of Christ, commonly called Christus, according to the best historians, was founded by Dyonisius, King of Portugal, about 1317, to encourage his nobles to assist him in his wars against the Moors. It was confirmed by Pope John XXII. 14th March, 1319, who gave to the knights the Rule of St. Benedict, reserving to himself the right of likewise nominating knights to this order, who bear a badge nearly similar, (See Pl. 2, fig. 13.) and so far may be considered a pontifical order. Pope Alexander VI. gave them permission to marry. The order had been under the control of twelve grand masters, nominated by the knights, when Pope Adrian VI. in 1522, conferred that dignity on John III. King of Portugal; and, in 1551, Pope Julius III. vested in the crown a perpetual right to the grand mastership, from which time the kings of Portugal have taken the title of Perpetual Administrators of the order. It acquired great wealth, and may be said to owe its origin to that of the knights templars, whose estates, on their suppression, were given to this equestrian militia.

Spanish historians affirm that the knights were possessed of four hundred and fifty four commanderies, and likewise the ecclesiastical tithes of all the lands and countries which were subject to the crown of Portugal, even of those which were situated in the two Indies.

After the separation of thirty-seven commanderies, which they possessed in Africa, Tomar became the chief seat of the order: a city nearly equi-distant from Lisbon and Coimbra.

The knights were not advanced to a commandery until they had given proofs of their military prowess and valour, in those fortresses which Portugal retained on the African coast.

According to the statutes of the order, the knights are obliged to prove, at least four degrees of hereditary nobility, but which may be dispensed with by the sovereign; and the knights are under the same regulations, and enjoy the same privileges, as those of the order of Calatrava in Spain.

The badge of the order is, a cross pattée gules, charged with a plain cross, coupé, argent, which, on festivals, is worn pendent to a collar of gold, composed of three rows of chains, (See Pl. 2, fig. 19.) but commonly worn round the neck, pendent to a broad scarlet ribbon. They likewise wear a long and ample black mantle, turned up with ermine, and thereon the crosses before described. The motto of the order is, Christiana militia.

Since 1789, the knights have been divided into three classes; six grand crosses, four hundred and fifty commanders, and an indefinite number of knights. Foreigners, honorary knights, are not subject to the statutes, nor do they receive any part of the revenue.

The knights grand crosses now wear the badge before described, surmounted by a radiant star of eight points, on the centre of which is enamelled a human heart, with a flame and cross issuant from the top; and which badge, on festivals, is worn pendent from the triple chain collar, but on ordinary occasions, from a broad red ribbon, sashways, from right to left. The commanders suspending the same badge from their necks; the grand crosses and commanders both wearing the star as in Pl. 2, fig. 13, on the left side; and the knights, the badge pendent from the button-hole, but without being surmounted by the heart, like that of the two first classes.

Note.—The red enamelled heart, which surmounts the badge of the two first classes of this and the other orders of Portugal, was an addition made by Queen Marie, intended to represent the sacred heart of Jesus, under the protection of which she placed the orders of her kingdom.

CHRIST, in Italy. This pontifical order, or more properly an order of Portugal to which Pope John XXII. reserved the right of nominating knights, was founded by Dyonisius, King of Portugal, 14 March, 1319, the particulars of which will be found under that order. The pontifical knights, as they are called, being nominated by the Pope, do not wear the star of the order, but a badge nearly similar, pendent from a gold chain or a red ribbon, worn round the neck. See Pl. 2, fig. 15.

CHRIST JESUS, or CROSS OF CHRIST. This order was instituted in 1206, by St. Dominick, and was partly religious, and partly military. The object of the founder was to procure a respectable body to fight against the Albigenses, then called heretics, whom he was desirous to extirpate. When worn out in service, or having accomplished their object, they devoted themselves to a religious life. The order became extinct in less than a century after its foundation. The badge of the order was, a cross flory, quarterly, sable and argent. See Pl. 2, fig. 18.

CHRISTIAN CHARITY. This order was instituted by Henry III. of France, for the maintenance of those military men who were maimed in his service; but the civil wars of the league prevented him from fully accomplishing the intended object. His successor, Henry IV. adopted the plan with more success, gave them a house in the suburbs of Paris, and assigned revenues for their support. After his assassination, the order became neglected, and was wholly discontinued by Louis XIV.; who, by founding the Hotel Royal des Invalides at Paris, and instituting the order of St. Louis, made a more honourable and better provision for the military, than a continuance of the order of Christian Charity. The badge of the order, which was borne on the left side of the outer garment, was a cross moline of white satin, or taffeta, edged with blue; on the centre, a lozenge of the last, charged with a fleur-de-lis gold; the whole encircled with the motto, Pour avoir fidèlement servi. See Pl. 2, fig. 10.

CONCEPTION. The order of the Conception in Germany and Italy, was instituted in 1618, by Ferdinand, Duke of Mantua, and Charles de Gonzaguez of Cleves, Duke of Nivernois and Rheteblois, in the wars against the infidels, and confirmed by Pope Urban VIII. in 1624. The badge of the order was, a cross of eight points or, enamelled azure; on the centre a medallion, rayonnated gold, thereon the image of the Holy Virgin, standing on a crescent, and holding in her arms the infant Jesus; round her head twelve stars, all enamelled proper, the reverse of the badge enamelled as the front; and on the medallion, St. Michael; the whole of the badge environed with the cordon of St. Francis, tied at the bottom. This badge was worn round the neck, pendent to a sky-blue ribbon. See Pl. 2, fig. 3.

CONCEPTION, a Brazilian order, instituted by the reigning king, on the day of his coronation, at Rio de Janeiro, 6 Feb. 1818, under similar statutes as the other orders of Portugal, and consisted of three classes. The badge is a star of eight points, enamelled white and gold, radiant between each point or, the rays charged with eight etoiles silver; on the centre a cypher, encircled with a sky-blue ribbon edged, and bearing the motto, Padroeiro Do Reino, in gold; the badge surmounted by the royal crown, and suspended by a broad sky-blue coloured ribbon. See Pl. 5, fig. 9. The star is the same as the badge, but not surmounted with the crown. See Pl. 2, fig. 8.

CONCORD. This order was founded in 1281, by Ferdinand, King of Castile and Leon, to perpetuate the memory of the conquest of Grenada sur le Maur; it consisted of one hundred and fifty-four knights, but has been long extinct.

CONCORD, a Prussian order, instituted by Christian Ernest, Margrave of Brandenburg, on his return from Spain, in 1660, in memory of the part he had taken in restoring peace and union to many of the princes of Europe.

The badge of the order was, a gold cross of eight points, enamelled white; in the centre a medal, bearing two olive-branches, passing saltierways through two crowns, and circumscribed with the word Concordans; the cross surmounted with an electoral crown, and worn pendent to an orange-coloured ribbon; on the reverse, the founder's cypher, with the date of institution. See Pl. 3, fig. 2.

CORDELIÈRE, in France, instituted in 1498, by Anne de Bretagne, after the death of her husband, Charles VIII. King of France, for widow ladies of noble families. The ensign of the order was, a Cordelière's girdle argent, which they placed round the escutcheon of their arms. It was also worn tied round the waist, with the ends of it hanging by their sides. They likewise wore a collar of silver of the same form. The order did not long survive the foundress, having soon after fallen into disuse. See Pl. 2, fig. 11.

CORDON JAUNE, or OF THE YELLOW STRING. This order was instituted in France, in 1608, by the Duke de Nevers, for catholic and protestant knights engaging to protect widows and orphans. It was abolished the same year by Henry IV. who, in its stead, instituted the order of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, and St. Lazarus. Some ridiculous ceremonies peculiar to this order were the cause of its being so suddenly abolished.

CRESCENT. The imperial order of the Turkish Crescent was instituted in August 1799, by Selim III. to reward the eminent services of the immortal Nelson, and commemorate the glorious victory of Aboukir, on which depended the very existence of the Ottoman Porte. The distinguished successes of the army under Abercrombie and Hutchinson, on the plains of Egypt, and the meritorious services of Lord Keith, and the Royal Navy under his lordship's command, induced the Sublime Porte to extend the order of the crescent far beyond the bounds of its pristine institution. It has been formed into three classes, and successively conferred on all the commanders-in-chief and superior officers, naval as well as military. The insignia of the second class was likewise presented to eight hundred British officers, who served in that expedition.

The decorations are composed of a badge, or medallion, of gold, of a circular form: on which is represented, on a field enamelled gules, a mullet of eight points within an increescent argent, (or rather formed with diamonds) and pendent from a red ribbon, which the knights of the first class wear scarfways; and on the left side of the upper garment, an oval star of pearls set in gold, in the centre of which is a large splendid ruby of the same form, on which is set a mullet of eight points, within an increescent, both formed of diamonds. See Pl. 2, fig. 17 and 14. The knights of the second class wear the same badge, suspended by a ribbon round the neck, but without the star; and the third class wear a smaller badge, attached to a ribbon from the button-hole.

A medal of honour was likewise presented by Selim III. to about one hundred English officers, after the battle of Aboukir, and the evacuation of Egypt by the French. See Pl. 3, fig. 1.

CRESCENT, an order of Naples, instituted in 1268, by Charles I. King of Naples and Sicily, who gave the first knights a collar of fleurs-de-lis and stars intermixed, and pendent thereto a crescent, with the words, Donec totum impleat orbem. Pope Clement IV. granted many privileges to the order, but it fell into decay, and was revived in 1484, by Rene, Count of Anjou, brother and heir to Louis III. King of Naples, for thirty-six knights, including the sovereign. But, like many other orders instituted about the same time, it continued only a few years; for the House of Anjou never had quiet possession of the kingdom of Naples and Sicily, from which they were expelled almost as soon as they entered, so that the order was neglected and discontinued. The badge was a golden crescent, bearing the letters L O Z, enamelled in red, which implied, L'oz en croissant, i. e. Praise by increasing. To this crescent were attached as many tags of gold, enamelled with red, as the knight who wore it had been present at battles, sieges of towns, justs, tournaments, and such like feats of arms. The collar of the order was composed of three rows of gold chain, to which the badge was attached. See Pl. 3, fig. 3.

CROWN. This order was instituted in 1390, by Enguerand Count de Soissons, Seigneur de Coucy. The decoration was a crown embroidered on the right arm.

CROWN, IRON. See IRON CROWN.

CROWN OF BAVARIA, or CIVIL MERIT. This order was founded 27th May, 1808, by Maximilian-Joseph, to reward the services of persons employed in the civil department of the state, and for other eminent or distinguishing acts of patriotism. It is composed of four classes; viz. twelve grand crosses, twenty-four commanders, and one hundred knights; the fourth class is composed of all those who have before obtained by their merit either gold or silver medals. Those of the first three classes have the right of bearing a title of nobility and arms assigned by the sovereign.

The council of the order is composed of a grand chancellor, four grand crosses, and four commanders. They assemble on the anniversary of the foundation, and present to the king the candidates worthy of admission into the order. The badge is borne by the grand crosses suspended from a broad sky-blue ribbon, edged with yellow, scarfways over the right shoulder. The commanders suspend it round the neck, and the knights from the button-hole. See Pl. 3, fig. 4. The grand crosses likewise wear on the left breast, the star. See Pl. 3, fig. 8.

CROWN OF LOVE, an order said to be instituted about 1479, by a king of Scotland, and confirmed by King James; but of which nothing certain can be traced.

CROWN OF SAXONY. This order was founded in July, 1807, after the peace of Tilsit, by Frederick-Augustus, King of Saxony, in memory of the divine protection afforded to that state during the late war. The order is composed of but one class, and none admitted below the rank of general.

CROWN ROYAL, OF KNIGHTS OF FRIEZLAND, instituted by Charlemagne, and confirmed in the Lateran Palace at Rome, in 802, as a reward of honour to the Friezlanders for their valiant behaviour in the emperor's army against the Saxons, and to encourage others in similar acts of valour. This order took its name from the badge, or ensign, of an imperial crown, which the knights used to wear on their breasts: they were invested with a military belt, and a box on the ear after the manner of administering the sacrament of confirmation by catholic bishops. For badge, see Pl. 29, fig. 11, in the Glossary.

CRUSADERS. Although the persons engaged in the expedition to the Holy Land against the Infidels, in support and defence of the Christians, did not constitute an order of knighthood, they were nevertheless distinguished by a badge of the cross, which was generally a cross potent gules.

CYPRUS, OR OF SILENCE, called also the order of the Sword of Cyprus, was instituted by Guy de Lusignan, King of Jerusalem and Cyprus, about the end of the twelfth century, soon after he had purchased the kingdom of Cyprus from Richard I. King of England. This order discontinued, and remained so, till the King of Sardinia, on his assuming the title of King of Cyprus, classed it amongst the orders of his kingdom. On the first institution of this order, it was conferred on three hundred barons, who were then created; and it continued to flourish till the Island of Cyprus was conquered by the Turks, when it became extinct. The knights were enjoined by oath, to defend religion and the sovereign, and not to divulge the affairs of the state. It was a military and religious order, under the rule of St. Basil.

The collar was composed of round cordons of white silk, interwoven in the manner of true lovers' knots, and interlaced with the letters S and R; and to this collar was pendent a medal of gold, enamelled with a sword, paleways, point downwards, the blade environed with the letter S, and round the medal the motto, Securitas regni. See Pl. 3, fig. 5.

DANEBOG, OF DENMARK. The origin of this order is somewhat uncertain; some historians placing it during the first age of the Danish monarchy; and others under Waldemar II. in 1219, and it is said, in commemoration of a miraculous standard, which fell from heaven during a battle with the Livouians, and so revived the courage of Waldemar's soldiers, that they gained a complete victory. Upon this standard, it is pretended, was a white cross, and it was called in the Danish language, Danebrog or Danenburgh; that is, The strength of the Danes. This order fell into decay, but was revived by Christian V. in 1671, on the birth of his eldest son, prince Frederick. This monarch augmented and embellished the ensigns of the order. It does not appear that there were any statutes till 1693, which remained in force until 1808; when Frederick VI. placed the order under new statutes, and it became a civil, as well as a military order, to recompense services to the state; and all Danish citizens were considered eligible for admission: The number of knights is indefinite: they are divided into four classes; viz. grand commanders, who compose the chapter of the order, and are designated by the title of excellency, and rank with lieutenant-generals: grand crosses, who rank with major-generals, and into which second class all knights were admitted, who were of the order prior to 1808: commanders, who compose the third class; and knights, forming the fourth, or junior class of the order: the third ranking with superior officers; and the last with subalterns.

No person can be admitted into the first or second class, unless previously nominated to the third or fourth, except by especial grace of the sovereign; and upon being raised to the higher rank, he ceases to wear the insignia of the lower class. Besides these four classes, others were admitted, forming a fifth, called Men of Danebrog, who are not eligible to admission as knights, but are admitted to the assembly of the order, and to whom all sentinels pay the respect of carrying arms.

The grand commanders, or first class, bear a badge, or cross pattée, set with diamonds, the lower limb being somewhat longer than the other three, with an imperial crown of gold between each angle; on the top of the cross, the cypher FR, surmounted by the crown and pendent by a double gold ring from a broad white watered ribbon, with a red border, upon ordinary occasions; but on solemn festivals, it was worn pendent from a collar, consisting of a double chain of three links, uniting alternately: the letter W, in gold, ensigned with the regal crown, a white enamelled cross pattée, and the letter C in gold; in the middle of which was the figure 5, also ensigned with the crown. See Pl. 3, fig. 11 and 6. The grand commanders likewise wear a silver star of eight points, on which is the cross, the three upper limbs reaching almost to the extremities of the rays, and the lower limb somewhat below, covering the bottom part of the star. On the centre of the cross is a W, ensigned with the crown, and on the four limbs the motto, thus divided, G U D · O G · K O N · G E N · (God and the King.) See Pl. 3, fig. 19.

The second class wear a badge, or golden cross, of like form, enamelled and decorated with fourteen diamonds, attached to the collar, or suspended by the broad ribbon before described, (See Pl. 3, fig. 10) worn scarfways from left to right, together with the star on the left side, but which was anciently worn on the right. The ecclesiastics of this class, and the knights of the order of the Elephant, who, from being such, are also entitled to the decorations of this order, suspend the badge from the neck.

The third class bear a badge, or white enamelled cross, edged with blue and gold, with crowns between the angles, and surmounted with the cypher and crown, like that of the grand commanders, or first class, with the letter W, crown and motto on the cross, as in the star. See Pl. 3, fig. 11. The badge is suspended from the ribbon round the neck. This class likewise wear, on the left side, the star, or rather, the cross, without rays. The fourth class wear from the button-hole, on the left side, a similar badge to that worn by the third. See Pl. 3, fig. 17.

DEATH'S HEAD, in Silesia, instituted in 1652, by Silvius Nimrod, Duke of Wurtemberg, who named his mother Grand Prioress; and at first, both sexes were admitted into it; but it soon fell into disuse, and was revived in 1709, by Louise Elizabeth, widow of Philip, Duke of Saxe-Mersburg, daughter of the original founder.

It was then declared by the statutes, that a princess of the House of Wurtemberg could alone be sovereign of the order, and that none but women could be received into it. Virtue and merit were the only necessary qualifications; birth and fortune were unattended to.

Gaming, theatrical amusements, and luxuries of every kind, were strictly prohibited, and punished by fines, which were distributed to the poor on Good Fridays.

The ladies of the order were obliged to appear once a year before the sovereign, and to produce a manuscript, containing their remarks on the lives and deaths of their predecessors of the order; these compositions were lodged in the archives, under the care and direction of a gentleman, who wore the badge of the order, and was styled, treasurer, trustee, and director of the order of the Death's Head.

The badge of the order was, a death's head, enamelled white, surmounted with a cross pattée sa.; above the cross pattée, another cross, composed of five large jewels, by which it was worn on the breast, suspended from a black ribbon, edged with white, and on the ribbon the motto, Memento mori. But on the death of any of the order, the survivors wore the badge pendent from a black ribbon, over a white one, on which was the name of the deceased. See Pl. 3, fig. 8.

DE LA BAND. See BAND, or SCARF.

DE LA CALZA, or OF THE STOCKING, at Venice, an order instituted about 737, by Malamocco, the Doge. It was at first composed of twelve young noblemen or gentlemen, who bound themselves by oath to the service of the state. Their habit was a crimson senator's vest, and their ensign a sun on a shield, which was used as a seal, and painted on their banners. It derived the appellation Of the Stocking, from the knights companions wearing on their right leg a stocking of several colours, embroidered in figures with gold and silver, which reached from the upper part of the thigh down to the foot: on the left leg they wore a green stocking. It is said to have continued until about 1689, when it was discontinued.

DE LA JARA. See LILY OF ARRAGON.

DE LA SAINTE AMPOUILLE. See HOLY PHIAL.

DE LA SCAMA, or OF THE SCALE, a Spanish order, said to have been instituted by Don John II. King of Castile, about 1318, to reward the services of those who assisted him to drive the Moors out of his dominions. The ensign was, a cross, composed of the scales of fishes, from whence it derived its name; scama, in the Spanish language, signifying the scale of a fish.

During the reign of the founder, the knights of this order were of great service against the Moors: but after his death, it lost much of its splendour, and was at length entirely laid aside, its possessions being secularized, and annexed to the crown.

The mantle of the knights was of white silk, with a badge on the left breast, of a blue cross, composed of scales. See Pl. 3, fig. 23.

DELIVERS OF VENEZUELA, an order projected in May, 1819, by Bolivar, General-in-Chief of the Independents of South America; the insignia of which were left to the republic to settle.

DOG AND COCK, said to have been instituted in France, 500, by Lisoye de Montmorenci, who, having been baptized at the same time as King Clovis, thereupon obtained for himself and his successors the appellation of the first Christian, a title which hath ever since attended that of Premier Baron of France, which they have likewise always borne. Some writers affirm, that the general estates of the kingdom being assembled at Orleans, this Lisoye de Montmorenci prevailed on several other knights to appear there, habited in a gold collar, with the figure of a dog, the ordinary emblem of fidelity, pendent thereto. Their cry of war was the same as the motto of the order, viz. Dieu aide au premier Chrétien et Baron du France; and they bore a dog for their crest, in testimony of their fidelity to the crown of France.

It seems that the order of the Cock was likewise instituted by the same family; but the time of its institution is uncertain. Philip I. of France, encouraged this order, and added to it many knights, as is well ascertained by record.

These two orders were united by one of the kings of France, and the badge of the united order was, a dog and cock, pendent to a collar, composed of a treble chain of gold.

DOUBLE CRESCENTS, or SHIP AND ESCALLOP SHELL, the order sometimes called the Ship and Double Crescent, is said to have been instituted in 1260, by St. Louis, King of France, in commemoration of the hazardous naval expedition which he and his three sons, Philip, John, and Peter, undertook, to assist the Christians against the Infidels; others assert, that the object of the institution was to engage the assistance of the nobility in forwarding the works at his new-built maritime town of Aigue Mortes, in Provence, as well as to induce them, by a particular mark of distinction, to accompany him in his African expedition, which proving unfortunate, and terminating in his death, the order became extinct in France a few years after its institution; although it flourished for three centuries in Naples and Sicily, where it was introduced by his brother Charles of Anjou, who succeeded to these kingdoms. The collar of the order was composed of gold scallop shells, intermixed with double crescents; to which was pendent a badge, whereon was enamelled a ship, rigged, ar. floating on waves of the same. See Pl. 3, fig. 24. It is supposed, that the scallop-shells were intended to represent the port of Aigue Mortes, where St. Louis and his sons embarked; the crescents, to denote his intentions of waging war against the Turks; and the ship signified the voyage about to be undertaken.

DOVE, or HOLY GHOST, in Spain, an order instituted about 1379, by John I. King of Castile, in the city of Sagovia: or, according to other authors, founded by his son Henry, in 1399. It soon fell into decay, and was discontinued. The collar was composed of two rows of gold chain, interspersed, at equal distances, with pieces representing rays of the sun; pendent thereto, was the badge of the order, a dove, displayed, ar. with its head downwards, on rays of gold. See Pl. 3, fig. 25.

DRAGON OVERTHROWN. This order was instituted in 1418, by the Emperor Sigismund, in order, according to Edmondson, to perpetuate the memory of the condemnation, by the council of Constance, of John Huss and Jerome of Prague, for heresy, in propagating their doctrines in Hungaria, Bohemia, and different parts of Germany, and for which they were burnt; others assert, that the origin was for the purpose of engaging the nobility of the kingdom of Hungary to defend its frontiers against the Turks. The order was in much esteem, during the life of the founder; but declined after his death, and soon became obsolete. The collar was composed of double chains of gold, intermixed with crosses of Lorraine, enamelled green, to which was suspended the badge, being the figure of a dragon, prostrate on its back, with wings expanded, enamelled with a variety of colours, (See Pl. 3, fig. 26); but, in common, the knights wore only a green cross flory.

EAGLE, RED. See RED EAGLE.

EAGLE, WHITE. See WHITE EAGLE.

EAR OF CORN AND ERMINE. This order was instituted in 1381, by John IV. Duke of Brittany, surnamed the Valiant; others say, in 1405, by Francis, Duke of Brittany, to perpetuate the memory of his grandfather, John the Conqueror, and upon which institution he rebuilt his castle called Ermine. The knights were twenty-five in number; and ladies were admitted into this order, which at first was only called the order of the Ermine. It became extinct upon the union of Brittany with the monarchy, by the marriage of Anne de Bretagne with Charles VIII. of France.

The collar was composed of ears of corn, two and two, saltierways, and interlaced with each other. The badge, which was borne pendent to the collar, was an ermine, on a mount, enamelled, ppr.; round the mount, on an escroll, the motto, A ma vie. See Pl. 3, fig. 27.

ELPHANT, WHITE. See WHITE ELEPHANT.

ELIZABETH THÉRÈSE. This order was founded by Elizabeth Christine, widow of the Emperor Charles VI. of Austria, in 1750, for twenty officers only, from the rank of colonel to that of general, who had served the House of Austria for a period of thirty years. It was formerly divided into three classes: those of the first, received 1100 florins; the second, 800 florins; and those of the third class, 500 florins. The order was called the Theresian Military Establishment of Elizabeth.

In the year 1771, the Empress Maria Thérèse renewed the order, changed its form, and added one more to the number, making it to consist of twenty-one knights; of whom six receive an annual pension of 1000 florins; eight, 800 florins; and the remaining seven, 500 florins.

The Aulic Council of War propose the candidates for admission, and the emperor makes his selection.

This order now consists of but one class of knights, although in receipt of different sums, without distinction as to birth, religion, country, or possession of other

ERMINE. Ferdinand I. King of Naples, in 1463, having ended the war against John of Lorraine, Duke of Calabria, his brother-in-law Marius Marcianus, Duke of Sessa and Prince of Rosiano, entered into a conspiracy to assassinate Ferdinand, in order that the Duke of Calabria might possess himself of the kingdom of Naples; but the plot being discovered, and the Prince of Rosiano apprehended, the king, instead of inflicting summary justice upon him, by depriving him of life, granted him a pardon, and, in memory of the event, instituted this order, into which, not only the prince himself was admitted, but all the nobles of his dominions. It has, however, been long extinct. The collar was of gold chains intermixed with mud. The badge was an ermine, and the motto, Malo mori quam fœdari.

FALCON, WHITE. See WHITE FALCON.

FAN. This order, which was instituted by Louise Ulrique, hereditary Princess of Sweden, was at first established for ladies only, but into which both sexes were afterwards admitted. It was called the Order of Louise-Ulrique, or the Fan. On the badge are represented the sun and Noah's Ark, encircled with the motto, La liaison fait ma valeur, la diversion me perd, surmounted by a crown.

FERDINAND, ST. See ST. FERDINAND.

FIDELITY. This order of knighthood was founded 17th June, 1715, when the Margrave Charles-William, of Baden-Dourlack, laid the first stone of the castle of Carlsruhe. The order preserved its first statutes until 1803, when the electoral dignity was granted to the house of Baden. On the 8th May, in this year, the Grand Duke Charles-Frederick renewed the order, and divided it into two classes, viz. grand crosses and commanders. The Elector of Baden is grand master, and the princes of that house are born knights of the order.

Each knight on his reception pays twenty ducats. The officers of the order consist of, a secretary, treasurer, and keeper of the records. The badge of the order, which is worn by the grand crosses, suspended by a broad orange-coloured ribbon, edged with blue, scarfways from right to left, and by the commanders round the neck, is, a cross of eight points, enamelled red, with letters C C in gold, interlaced back to back; between the principal angles, on a circular centre, are the same initials, on a mount or rock, and over the letters, the word Fidelitas; the cross surmounted by the electoral crown, from the top of which it is pendent by a gold ring. On the reverse, on the centre, which is of gold, is a fesse gu. See Pl. 4, fig. 5.

Both classes wear, on the left side of their upper garment, a silver star of eight points, upon which is a cross pattée gu. with two C's in gold, as before described; between the principal angles, and on the centre of the cross, a circular medallion of gold, on which is the cypher on a rock, and over it the motto, Fidelitas. See Pl. 4, fig. 6.

FIDELITY, or PERFECT UNION, an order of Denmark, instituted in 1732, by Sophia, consort of Christian VI. King of Denmark. It flourished during the life of the foundress, but was discontinued at her death, in 1770. It was conferred on both sexes. The badge of the order was, a star of eight points, enamelled white, cantoned with rays of gold; on the centre, an escutcheon, quarterly; first and fourth, gu. a lion ramp. or, supporting a Danish axe ar.; second and third, az. an eagle displ. or. It was worn pendent to a crimson ribbon, edged with gold, round the neck of the ladies, and from the button-hole of the gentlemen. See Pl. 4, fig. 1.

FIDELITY, or the order of the WHITE CROSS, in Tuscany, instituted in 1814, by Ferdinand III. Grand Duke of Tuscany, and Archduke of Austria; and intended to reward military service; the particulars of which, or of the insignia, are not known.

FISH IN MOGUL, called Maki Moratiel, the first word being the Persian for fish, and the latter, translated, meaning dignity, or title of the fish. It is supposed to be as ancient as the Mogul dynasty itself, and very likely to have been revived by one of the emperors contemporary with Queen Elizabeth. The first British subject upon whom this dignity was conferred, was Lord Lake, in 1804, after the Mahratta war, when he redeemed Shah Allum. The idea of selecting the fish, as a mark of dignity, is supposed to have arisen from the tradition that, when Abraham had sacrificed the scape-goat, instead of his son, he threw the knife from him, which, according to the Mahomedan version, fell into the sea, and struck a fish. From the belief of this circumstance having really occurred, the fish is the only animal eaten by the Mahomedans without previously having its throat cut.

The Asiatic custom being that these honourable badges, or insignia, should be borne before, and not worn by, the persons dignified with such honours, the Ullum, which is depicted in Pl. 3, fig. 12, is always carried upon an elephant, as a special sign of respect paid to this kind of sceptre, which seems to represent the long-venerated plant, the Lotus, the which, perhaps on account of its fecundity, or some other reason unknown to us, has been, from time immemorial, worshipped allegorically by the Hindoos, from whom the Egyptians derived their religious tenets.

The Goog is another mark of distinction, carried before other dignitaries of the empire, which somewhat resembles, in its formation, bulbous seeds; alluding to the fertility of the land, and in all probability has some other mysterious meaning, which the Brahmins still keep secret. See Pl. 3, fig. 20.

The Punja is considered the emblem of good faith; and whenever a breach of it was suspected, the Panja was exhibited. See Pl. 3, fig. 16. The word means literally, the five fingers; and when a potentate of the east ratified a treaty which he meant punctually to perform, a sort of seal, made of sandal-wood kneaded into a kind of paste, was attached; on which he pressed the front of his hand, leaving an impression from it, which was exhibited as occasion required.

The Maki is the representation of a fish of an immense size, borne in public ceremonies before the principal officers of state. See Pl. 3, fig. 16. This fish is made of copper, and covered with green brocade; but the reason of its adoption is matter of mere conjecture.

FLEECE, GOLDEN. See GOLDEN FLEECE.

FOOLS. This order was instituted in 1360, by Adolphus, Duke of Cleves, on the feast of St. Rumbert. It consists of thirty-five knight companions, chosen from among the nobility. The badge, which was embroidered in silver on the left side of a short silk mantle, was the figure of a man, habited like a fool, in a short waistcoat, a cowl of red and yellow patch-work, with morrice bells of gold, yellow stockings, and black shoes; holding in the hand a bowl filled with fruits.

FORTUNE, instituted about 1190, in Palestine, to defend the cross—the standard of the army; and when these knights assembled, they each held in the hand a lighted flambeau, and wore an upper robe of cloth of gold, with a silver breast-plate, ornamented with flames and figures of animals in gold, and the collar or chain of the same metal.

GARDEN OF OLIVES, an order said to have been founded in 1197, by Baudouin, King of Jerusalem; but of which nothing particular is known.

GARTER. The most noble order of the Garter, considered by all nations as the highest in rank and dignity in the world, was instituted by Edward III, either in 1344, or 1360; yet the occasion, and the certain æra of its institution, are controverted articles in history; and the loss of the original statutes, ancient registers, and annals, together with the silence of contemporary writers, have left modern authors at liberty to throw out various conjectures in both cases. Some writers say it took its rise from the garter of Joan, Countess of Salisbury, accidentally dropping off, whilst dancing at a ball; which was picked up by the king, who, aptly at the moment, applied the motto, Honi soit qui mal y pense, adding, that he would shortly advance the garter to so high an honour, that most of his nobles would be proud to wear it. Du Chesne has handed down a similar account of its origin, from the dropping of a lady's garter, but relates the circumstance of the queen having met with this accident, in retiring from the court to her own apartment. These accounts, however, are now no more credited, than either the story of the order being grounded on Richard I. at the siege of Acon, having tied about the legs of a certain number of his officers, thongs of leather, with promise of future reward, if they proved victorious; or the relation of Micheli Marquez, that the order, termed from the Greek language, Periscelidis Ordo, was elected to the memory of one Periscelide; or the still more ridiculous dream of Joshua Barnes, of its derivation from the Cabiri, amongst the Samothracians. Perhaps two inducements might jointly operate with Edward, to the establishment of the order; viz. a view to a reward due for military services, and a ceremonious respect for the ladies. Other writers say, that Edward, being a military genius, and engaged in a war for the recovery of France, which he claimed in right of his mother, was anxious to draw to his standard the best soldiers in Europe; and for that purpose, at first projected the restoration of King Arthur's round table, and, proclaiming a magnificent tilting, invited foreigners of quality and courage to the tournament. The place of meeting was fixed at Windsor; and Edward published his royal letters of protection for the safe coming and returning of such foreign knights as intended to take part in such exercises, which were fixed for the 19th of January, 1344.

A feast, or supper, began the solemnity, and the king ordained that this feast should be annually kept at Whitsuntide; for which purpose, his majesty erected a particular building in the castle, wherein was placed a round table, in imitation of King Arthur's at Winchester, of two hundred feet diameter, and his majesty entertained the knights at his own expense of one hundred pounds per week. The king commended himself and his companions to the patronage of St. George, who suffered martyrdom under Dioclesian the Emperor, and was a person of greater eminence, in both the eastern and western churches, than any other military saint; and that his memory might be preserved, he gave them the image of that saint sitting on horseback, encountering the dragon with a tilting spear; to be worn pendent to a blue ribbon round the neck. But afterwards, when Edward III. gained a decisive battle, (supposed that of Cressy,) in which, it is said, he used his garter for a signal, his majesty instituted this order of knighthood, giving the garter pre-eminence among its ensigns; from which the select number of knights at first chosen, were styled Equites Aureæ Periscelidis, or Knights of the Golden Garter.

The order consists of the sovereign and twenty-five companions, called knights of the Garter; and for their better regulation and governance, a body of statutes was compiled and ordained by the founder; since which, two other bodies of statutes have been established, one by Henry V. and the other by Henry VIII.; and commanded to be added to those of Edward III.

The principal offices of the order are five in number; viz. the prelate, whose office is inseparably annexed to the see of Winchester: the chancellor, whose office is annexed to the see of Salisbury: the register, whose office is annexed to the deanery of Windsor: Garter king of arms; and the usher, or black rod.

The Prelate is the first and premier officer of great honour, but without either salary or fees attached to the office. He had apartments allotted to him in Windsor Castle, separated on the north side, called Winchester tower; and as often as he went thither, was allowed court livery for himself and servants, according to the degree of an earl. By his oath, he is to be present at all chapters, whereunto he is summoned; to report all things truly; to take the scrutiny faithfully, and present it to his sovereign; to keep secret the counsels of the order, and to promote and maintain the honour of it; and by his office, he takes place in parliament next to the Bishop of Durham.

By warrant under the signet of the order, dated 19th Feb. 13 Charles II. the prelate had assigned him for his livery of the order, one robe of purple velvet, containing eighteen yards, and ten yards of white taffeta for lining; as also the cross of St. George within the garter, having laces, buttons, and tassels of purple silk and Venice gold: he is to wear this robe yearly, on the vigil and day of St. George, whether it be in parliament, or any other solemn occasion or festival whatsoever. The honours attached to this officer are, that his place in all proceedings and ceremonies of the order is on the right hand of the chancellor. His arms are impaled with those of the see of Winchester, surrounded with the garter.

The Chancellor of the order is to keep the great seal, and has place and precedence in all ceremonies and proceedings, next the prelate; and in all places and assemblies is ranked after the knights privy counsellors, and before the chancellor of the exchequer. The statutes allow him apartments in Windsor Castle, in the south-west tower of the lower ward, called Chancellor's Tower. His oath, robe, and livery, in the sovereign's court, are the same as the prelate. His office is not only to seal original statutes appointed to remain perpetually in Windsor Castle; but also those copies, of which each knight companion is obliged to have one, are in his keeping, with letters of license, mandates, and certificates, relating to the order. His badge, which was first assigned in the reign of William and Mary, is a medal of gold, enamelled with a red rose, encircled with the garter and motto; and on the reverse is enamelled the figure of St. George, within the garter, which is worn pendent to a ribbon or gold chain round the neck. He likewise bears his arms impaled with the see of Salisbury, encircled with the garter, like the prelates.

At the first establishment of the order, the office of chancellor was vested in one of the knights; but Edward IV. thought fit to give it to a person distinct from the knights companions, and annexed the office to the see of Salisbury.

The Register was one of the three officers constituted at the first institution of the order. His mantle is of satin, lined with taffeta, with an escutcheon of the cross of St. George, embroidered on the left shoulder, but not encircled with the garter; with tassels of the same as the prelate and chancellor. He had also apartments assigned to him in Windsor Castle; and carried, as a symbol of office, a scroll, and afterwards a book, viz. the red book of the order, covered with crimson velvet, ornamented with two pens in saltier, interlacing the garter; over which were the royal cypher and crown.

Garter, so created by Henry V. with the advice and consent of all the knights companions, and is also principal king of arms of the corporation of heralds, considered a distinct office, but ever united with that of Garter in one person. The services enjoined him, relating to the order, were, in preceding times, performed by Windsor Herald, an officer created by Edward III. His robe is the same as the register's, and he wears, pendent to a gold chain or ribbon, a medal or badge, enamelled with the sovereign's arms impaled with the cross of St. George, encircled with the garter, and surmounted with an imperial crown. He likewise bears a golden sceptre of office, and, as principal king of arms, is entitled to a crown or coronet of gold, which will be found more particularly described under Coronet, or Crown, of the kings of arms, and depicted in Pl. 29, fig. 7.

Black Rod, instituted by the founder; and, by the statutes, should be a gentleman of blood and arms, born within the sovereign's dominions; and if not a knight at his admission into the office, is to be knighted; and, for the honour of the order, is appointed the chief usher in the kingdom. In a chapter held at Whitehall, 13th Feb. sixth Charles I. it was decreed that the office of Black Rod should, from thenceforth successively, so soon as the same should become void, be annexed to some one of the gentleman-ushers, daily waiters, whom the sovereign should appoint. The oath taken by this officer (temp. Henry VIII.) was, "Truly and faithfully to observe and keep all the points of the statutes of the order, as to him belonged and appertained." His mantle is the same as the register and Garter's; and it was ordained that he or his deputy should carry a black rod (from which he has his title) before the sovereign, at the feast of St. George, within the Castle of Windsor, and at other solemnities and chapters of the order. On the top of this rod should be set a lion of England: it is used as a mace, and has the same authority to apprehend delinquents, and such as have offended against the statutes of the order, which is done by touching them with the rod; his fee for which is five pounds. This officer likewise wears a gold badge pendent to a chain or ribbon, round the neck, which is a knot (like those in the collar of the order) encompassed with the garter and motto, and alike on both sides. There was a house in Windsor Castle granted to this officer, by letters patent, during life. It was situated on the south side of the castle, in the middle ward; and, by the constitutions, he is granted barons' service at the church, and livery thereto appertaining. King Charles I. annexed to this officer the Little Park of Windsor, for ever, and not to be disposed of but under the great seal of the order, and that only to the usher of the order for the time being.

The habit and ensigns of the order have, at various times, undergone some little alteration in form, materials, and colour. They consist of the garter, mantle, surcoat, hood, George, collar, and cap and feathers; the four first were assigned by the founder, and the rest by King Henry VIII.

The Garter has the pre-eminence, from which the order derives its name; it was at first formed of sky-blue coloured velvet, but was altered to a darker hue, edged with gold, and bearing the motto, Honi soit qui mal y pense, in letters of gold, with a buckle, and pendent, richly chased of the same metal. It is worn on the left leg, a little below the knee.

The Mantle is also of blue velvet, lined with white taffeta, which fastens or ties at the collar with two long strings, called cordons, with large tassels at the end, made of blue silk, enriched with gold. On the left shoulder or breast, (the prelate and chancellor have this badge on the right) of this mantle, is richly embroidered the star of the order, which is formed of silver, with eight points or rays, the four principal points being somewhat longer than the angular ones, upon the centre of which is the red cross of St. George, encircled with the blue garter, edged with gold, bearing the motto, Honi soit qui mal y pense, in gold letters. The mantle worn by the sovereign being the same, differing only in the length of the train, which is longer than that of the knights. The mantle worn by the founder and knights, at the first feast of the order, was of fine woollen cloth; and no mention is made of the mantle being of velvet, till the beginning of the reign of Henry VI. The colour of it, appointed by the statutes of the order, was blue; and it so continued till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when it was changed to purple, and remained of that colour till about the twelfth year of the reign of King Charles I. when he restored the colour to its pristine hue.

The Surcoat, or Kirtle, as well as the mantle, was originally composed of woollen cloth; and so continued, at least, till the reign of Edward IV. about which time it was made of velvet; and, anciently, the colour varied every year, and was of blue, scarlet, sanguine, and white, but it is now made of crimson velvet, lined with white taffeta.

The Hood was formerly worn upon the head at all public ceremonies, and was made of the same materials as the mantle, and sometimes adorned with embroidery of garters; it is now of crimson velvet, affixed to the mantle as part of the habit; and instead of the head being covered with it, the sovereign and knights now wear a cap or hat of black velvet, lined with white taffeta, and adorned with a large plume of ostrich-feathers, in the centre of which is a tuft, or agrette, of black herons' feathers, and this plume is generally affixed to the cap or hat by a band of diamonds. The custom of wearing this cap and feathers at the great solemnities of the order had been sometime omitted, in and before the time of James I.; but at a chapter held 13 April, in the tenth year of his reign, it was again re-established.

The Collar is of gold, weighing thirty ounces Troy. It is composed of twenty-six pieces, in the form of the garter, enamelled blue, with the motto of the order in letters of gold; in the centre of each garter is a rose, enamelled red, seeded gold, and leaved vert. These twenty-six garters are fastened together with as many knots of gold. From one of these garters, in the middle of the collar, is pendent the badge of the order, being the figure of St. George, armed, sitting on horseback, with a spear encountering a dragon, which lies on his back, beneath the feet of the horse. See Pl. 4, fig. 18. The sovereign and knights wear in common the above badge, or figure of St. George, within the garter, all of gold, (called the lesser George) pendent to a broad deep-coloured blue ribbon, scarfways, over the left shoulder, hanging on the right side. On the left breast of their upper garment, they also wear a star of eight points, embroidered in silver, on the centre of which is the red cross of St. George on a silver field, encircled with the blue garter, the edge, buckle, and pendent, of gold, bearing the motto, Honi soit qui mal y pense, in letters of gold. See Pl. 3, fig. 14. The badge on the mantle of knights should be without rays.

The stockings and small clothes, which are united like pantaloons, are of pearl-coloured silk; on the outside of the right knee, is affixed a knot of open silver lace, and ribbons intermixed, in the form of a large rose: and a little below the left knee, is placed the garter before described.

The shoes are of white shamois leather, and red heels, with knots of roses like that on the right knee. The doublet is of cloth of silver, adorned before and behind, and down the sleeves, with several guards, or rows of open silver lace, each lace having a row of small buttons set down the middle; the cuffs are open, and adorned with the same kind of lace and ribbons, set in small loops; at the bottom of the upper seam of each cuff, is fixed a knot of silver ribbons, that falls over the gloves, which are of white kid leather, laced at the top with silver, and adorned at the opening with a knot like that on the cuff. The trousers, (which are of silver tissue, or cloth of silver, the same as the doublet, and adorned with two rows of lace and ribbons intermixed, and set at a small distance, that the cloth of silver appears between them) are buckled round the waist, and formed like puffed small clothes, reaching to the middle of the thigh, after the antique fashion of time of Henry VIII.

For the convenience of travelling, the knights were permitted to wear a blue ribbon under their boots, instead of the garter, but are never to appear in public without the blue ribbon, and the lesser George and star, except on the principal feasts in the year, when they wear the collar and badge, and then the ribbon and lesser George are not worn.

Ceremonial of Investiture of Knights of the Garter.

St. James's, Thursday, 17th Jan. 1806.

A chapter of the most noble order of the Garter having been summoned for this day, the knights companions, in their mantles and collars, with the officers of the order hereafter mentioned, in their mantles, chains, and badges, attended the sovereign in his own apartment; and being called over by Garter principal king of arms, a procession was made from thence to the great council-chamber, in the following order.

Earl Camden.
Earl Spencer.
Earl of Carlisle.
Earl of Westmoreland.
Earl of Chatham.
Marquess Cornwallis.
Prince William Frederick.
Duke of Cambridge.
Duke of Cumberland. Duke of Sussex.
Duke of Kent.
Duke of York.
Duke of Gloucester.
Garter. The Register.
The Prelate.
The Sovereign.

The sovereign and knights companions being seated, the register, in the absence of the chancellor, read a new statute, by which it was ordained, that the said order shall henceforth consist of the sovereign and twenty-five knights companions, together with such lineal descendants of the late sovereign, King George II. as shall have been elected, and may hereafter be elected, into the same, always excepting the Prince of Wales, who is a constituent part of the original institution.

The register then signified to the chapter, the sovereign's pleasure for filling up the vacant stalls in St. George's Chapel, at Windsor; and as, by the statutes, none but a knight can be elected, Garter was commanded to introduce the Duke of Beaufort, who was knighted by the sovereign with the sword of state. The Marquess of Abercorn, the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, the Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham, and the Earl of Chesterfield, were thereupon successively introduced, and knighted with the like ceremonies.

The knights companions then proceeded to the election; and the suffrages being collected by the register, and presented to the sovereign, Henry Charles, Duke of Beaufort was, by his majesty's command, declared duly elected. His grace was thereupon received at the door of the chapter-room, by the two junior knights commanders, and conducted between them to the sovereign, preceded by Garter, bearing the ensign of the order on a cushion.

Garter presenting the garter to the sovereign, his majesty, assisted by the two senior knights companions, buckled it on his grace's left leg, the register pronouncing the admonition. "To the honour of God omnipotent, and in memorial of the blessed martyr St. George, tie about thy leg, for thy renown, this noble Garter; wear it as the symbol of the most illustrious order, never to be forgotten nor laid aside; that thereby thou mayest be admonished to be courageous; and having undertaken a just war, in which thou shalt be engaged, thou mayest stand firm, valiantly fight, and successfully conquer."

Garter then presented the ribbon with the George to the sovereign; and his grace kneeling, the sovereign, with the assistance of the said two senior knights companions, put it over his grace's left shoulder; the register, in the mean time, pronouncing the admonition. "Wear this ribbon about thy neck, adorned with the image of the blessed martyr and soldier of Christ, St. George, by whose imitation provoked, thou mayest so overpass both prosperous and adverse adventures, that, having stoutly vanquished thy enemies, both of body and soul, thou mayest not only receive the praise of this transient combat, but be crowned with the palm of eternal victory." His grace, having kissed his majesty's hand, and saluted the knights present, withdrew.

After which, John James, Marquess of Abercorn; George, Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery; George, Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham; and Philip, Earl of Chesterfield; were severally elected, and invested with the like ceremonies. The chapter ended, Garter called over the knights, and a procession was made back to his majesty's apartment, in the order as before.

Ceremonial of Installation of the Knights of the Garter, as observed at the Installation of the Duke of Rutland, the Earl of Hardwicke, the Duke of Beaufort, the Marquess of Abercorn, the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, the Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham, and the Earl of Chesterfield, in presence of the Sovereign, at Windsor, on Tuesday, the 23rd April, 1806, being St. George's Day.

The knights companions in the complete habit of the order, the officers of the order in their mantles, the knights elect in the under habit of the order, having their caps and feathers in their hands, and the proxy for the Earl of Hardwicke in his ordinary habit, attended the sovereign in the royal apartment. The officers of arms, and the four serjeants at arms, with their maces, in the presence-chamber; the prebends and poor knights, as also the kettle-drums and house-trumpets, in the guard-chamber. The proxy, not going in the procession, retired privately to his chair at the back of the altar.

At half-past ten o'clock, Francis Townsend, Esq. Windsor Herald, officiating, with his majesty's permission, for Garter, (who was prevented attending from an accident two days previous) called over the knights, and the procession was made from the royal apartment, in the following order.

Kettle Drums and House Trumpets.
Poor Knights, two and two.
Prebends, two and two.
Pursuivants and Heralds at Arms, two and two.
Norroy King at Arms.
The Knights Elect, two and two, having their caps and feathers in their hands; viz.
Earl of Chesterfield. Earl of Winchilsea.
Earl of Pembroke. Marquess of Abercorn.
Duke of Beaufort.
Duke of Rutland.

The Knights Companions, in their order; viz.
 Earl Camden.
 Earl Spencer.

Earl of Westmoreland. Marquess of Salisbury.
 Earl of Chatham.
 Duke of Devonshire.

Prince William Frederick. Duke of Gloucester.
 Duke of Cambridge. Duke of Sussex.
 Duke of Cumberland. Duke of Kent.
 Duke of Clarence. Duke of York.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

Band of Gentlemen Pensioners. 3 Sergeants at Arms. Band of Gentlemen Pensioners. 3 Sergeants at Arms.

Deputy Gentle- man Usher of the Black Rod, with his Rod.	The Register, with the Book.	Deputy Garter, with the Rod, or Sceptre of Garter.

Lord Chamberlain, The Sword of State borne
 Earl of Dartmouth. by the Duke of Montrose.
 The Sovereign,
 in the full habit of the order;
 his train borne by the Marquess of Worcester, eldest son of the Duke of Beaufort; and the Marquess of Tavistock, eldest son of the Duke of Bedford; and by the Honourable George Villiers, in the absence of the Master of the Robes.
 Band of Gentlemen Pensioners.

In this manner, moving to the chapel, the procession entered by the south door, passed down the south aisle, and up the north aisle, to the chapter-house; the poor knights dividing on either side, at some distance from the chapter-house; then the prebends next above, and the officers of arms, nearest to the chapter-house. None entering with the sovereign into the chapter-house, but the knights companions and the sworn officers of the order; the knights elect retired to their chairs in the aisle behind the altar. Deputy Black Rod and the register, not having been sworn, remained in the aisle opposite to the knights elect.

The sovereign and the knights companions being seated, Garter acquainted his majesty, that Robert Quarre, Esq. deputy Black Rod, humbly prayed admittance, to take the oath of office; and he being thereupon introduced by Garter, knelt near the sovereign, on the left hand, when Garter administered the oath. Deputy Black Rod, having kissed the sovereign's hand, retired to his place.

Then Garter, in the absence of the chancellor, acquainted his majesty, that the Dean of Windsor, the Honourable and Reverend Doctor Edward Legge, prayed admittance, to take the oath as register of the order. He was thereupon introduced by Garter and deputy Black Rod, the latter carrying the ensigns of the register's office; Garter administered the oath; and the register, being invested, and having kissed the sovereign's hand, withdrew to his place.

Then, by the sovereign's command, the register, in the absence of the chancellor, standing on the left hand of his majesty, read the new statute. Garter then, by the sovereign's command, introduced the Duke of Rutland, who was received at the door by two junior knights, and conducted to the table, where the surcoat, girdle, and sword had been placed; and Garter presenting the surcoat, his majesty was graciously pleased, with the assistance of the two senior knights, to invest his grace there-with; the register reading the admonition. "Take this robe of crimson, to the increase of your honour, and in token or sign of the most noble order you have received, wherewith you, being defended, may be bold, not only strong to fight, but also to offer yourself to shed your blood for Christ's faith, the liberties of the church, and the just and necessary defence of them that are oppressed and needy." Then Garter presented the girdle and the sword, which were put on his grace.

Sir Joseph Sydney Yorke, (who had received the honour of knighthood on the 21st instant, in the royal apartments) was then introduced as proxy for the Earl of Hardwicke, lord lieutenant of Ireland.

Garter then introduced, severally, the Duke of Beaufort, the Marquess of Abercorn, the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Winchelsea, and the Earl of Chesterfield, who were invested with the like ceremonies.

The knights elect and the proxy continued in the chapter-house, while the procession to the chapel was made down the north aisle, and up the middle aisle, into the choir, in the following order:

First, the poor knights, who, coming into the choir, made their reverences, and placed themselves on each side near the altar.

The prebends, making their reverences in like manner, went to their places under the stalls. The officers of arms making their reverences, stood next to the poor knights.

The knights companions, in the order in which they had walked, made their reverences, and retired under their banners.

The register, deputy Garter, and deputy Black Rod, making their reverences together, stood before their form. The prelate did the same.

The sovereign made one reverence to the altar, and being in his stall, repeated the same; the train-bearers standing on the steps leading up to the sovereign's stall. The sword of state, with the lord chamberlain, on the steps before or under the sovereign's stall.

Deputy Garter then going into the middle of the choir, and making his double reverence, waved his sceptre towards his royal highness the Prince of Wales, who whereupon, coming from under his banner, made his reverence, and ascended into his stall; where, repeating his reverences, he sat down. All the other knights continued standing under their banners.

The prelate was conducted to the altar by the serjeant of the vestry; and two prebends, by the verger of St. George's Chapel.

Then deputy Garter, with the usual reverences, took up the banner of his serene highness the late Duke of Saxe-Gotha; and holding it up, Norroy king of arms and the senior herald joined, and, making their reverences, repaired to their royal highnesses the Dukes of York and Clarence; who, thereupon joining, and making their reverences together, received the banner from deputy Garter; and being preceded by the said officers of arms, advanced to the first step of the altar, where they repeated their reverences, and coming to the rails, made one reverence to the altar; then kneeling, they delivered the banner to the prelate, who, assisted by the prebends, placed it at the south-end of the altar. The two knights then returned, with like reverences, and stood under their banners.

The sword was then delivered by deputy Garter to their royal highnesses the Dukes of Kent and Cumberland, who, attended by the said officers of arms, offered the same, with like ceremonies.

The helm and crest were offered by their royal highnesses the Dukes of Sussex and Cambridge, with the same ceremony.

The achievements of the late Marquess of Stafford, the late Duke of Beaufort, and the late Duke of Roxburgh, were offered with the same ceremonies, by the six senior knights, not of the blood-royal, attended each time by two heralds in rotation. Deputy Garter then summoned the knights to ascend their stalls.

All the knights being in their stalls, deputy Garter summoned the two senior knights under their banners, in order to instal the Duke of Rutland; and they proceeded to the chapter-house, in the following order.

Poor knights, officers of arms, the register, deputy Garter, deputy Black Rod, and the two knights. And from the chapter-house, his grace was conducted to the choir, in the following order.

Poor Knights.
Officers of Arms.

Deputy Black Rod.	}	Deputy Garter, carrying on a cushion the mantle, hood, great col- lar, and book of statutes.	}	The Register, carrying in his hand the new testament and the forms of oath and ad- monitions.
		The two Knights,		having between them the Duke of Rutland, in his surcoat and sword, carrying his cap and feathers in his hand.

having between them the Duke of Rutland, in his surcoat and sword, carrying his cap and feathers in his hand.

All entering the choir with the usual reverences, deputy Garter placing the cushion on the desk of the lower stall, the two knights, with the duke, entered into the lower stall, where the register administered the oath, deputy Black Rod holding the Gospels. "You, being chosen to be one of the honourable company of this most noble order of the Garter, shall promise and swear, by the holy evangelists, by you here touched, that wittingly or willingly, you shall not break any statute of the said order, or any articles in them contained, the same being agreeable, and not repugnant, to the laws of Almighty God and of this realm, as far forth as to you belongeth and appertaineth. So help you God, and his holy word."

Then the two knights conducted his grace into the upper stall, the register and deputy Garter entering into the lower stall, and deputy Black Rod remaining in the area.

Deputy Garter then presented the mantle to the knights, who invested his grace therewith, the register reading the admonition. "Receive this robe of heavenly colour, the livery of this most excellent order, in augmentation of thy honour, ennobled with the shield and red cross of our Lord, by whose power thou mayest safely pierce troops of thy enemies, and be over them ever victorious; and being in this temporal warfare glorious in egregious and heroic actions, thou mayest obtain eternal and triumphant joy."

Next, deputy Garter presented the hood, and afterwards the great collar and George, with which the knights invested the duke, whilst the register read the admonition. "Wear this collar about thy neck, adorned with the image of the blessed martyr and soldier of Christ, St. George, by whose imitation provoked, thou mayest so overpass both prosperous and adverse encounters, that, having stoutly vanquished thy enemies, both of body and soul, thou mayest not only receive the praise of this transient combat, but also, at the last, the endless and everlasting reward of victory."

Deputy Garter then presented the statute-book, which the knights delivered to his grace; and then, placing the cap and feather on his head, they seated him in his stall, and his grace, rising up, made his double reverence; the knights, after embracing and congratulating him, descended, and making their reverences, went up into their stalls, and the officers to their places.

Then deputy Garter summoned the two knights next in seniority, in order to instal the proxy for the Earl of Hardwicke, who was thereupon conducted, with the same ceremony, into the stall under that appointed for his principal, where the register administered to him the oath. He was then conducted into the upper stall; and the mantle being presented by deputy Garter, the knights put the same over his left arm, so that the cross, embroidered within the garter, might be seen. They then seated the said proxy in the stall, with the ceremony as before mentioned, and returned to their stalls; the proxy immediately rising, made his reverences, and remained standing during the rest of the ceremony, with the mantle on his arm.

The Duke of Beaufort, the Marquess of Abercorn, the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Winchilsea, and the Earl of Chesterfield, were severally introduced, and installed in the same manner as the Duke of Rutland.

Divine service then began; and at the words of the offertory, "Let your light so shine," &c. the organ playing, the officers of the wardrobe spread a carpet on the steps of the altar; and deputy Black Rod, making his obeisances, went up to the rails of the altar on the north side, where he received from the yeomen of the wardrobe a rich carpet and cushion, which, with the assistance of the yeoman, he laid down for the sovereign to kneel upon. In the mean time, deputy Garter summoned the knights from their stalls, and being all under their banners, the sovereign, making one reverence to the altar, descended from his stall; and then, making another reverence in the middle of the choir, proceeded to the offering, in the following order.

Deputy Garter. The Register.

The Lord Chamberlain. The Sword of State.

The Sovereign.

His Majesty's train borne as before.

As the procession passed, the Duke of Devonshire, (being the senior knight not of the blood royal) making his reverence, placed himself a little behind his majesty, on the right side. The sovereign, coming to the rails of the altar, made a reverence, when deputy Black Rod, on his knee, delivered the offering to the knight, who delivered it to the sovereign; and his majesty, taking off his cap, and kneeling, put the offering into the basin; then rising, made his reverence to the altar; retiring, made another in the middle of the choir (all the attendants turning as his majesty did, and making their reverences at the same time); and being in his stall, another. The knight who delivered the offering retired under his banner, when the procession came opposite to the same.

During the sovereign's return, the officers of the wardrobe removed the carpet and cushion whereon his majesty had kneeled, leaving the first carpet, and placing two cushions for the knights; and deputy Black Rod returned to his place.

All the knights standing under their banners, Norroy king of arms and the senior herald joined with usual reverences, and went to his royal highness the Prince of Wales, who, in the middle of the choir, making his double reverence, was conducted to the altar; where, taking off his cap, and making another reverence, he knelt, and offered gold and silver in the basin; and returning in the same order, went into his stall, where, making his reverence, he sat down.

Then the next knights in seniority, (those of the blood royal being attended by Norroy and the senior herald, and the other knights by two heralds in rotation) offered in like manner; and so on, till all the knights and the proxy had offered; whereupon they ascended their stalls.

Divine service proceeded; and being ended, deputy Garter summoned the knights under the banners, juniors first; which done, the poor knights joined, made their reverences, and went out of the choir; and then the prebends, the officers of arms, the knights, the officers of the order. The lord chamberlain and the sword of state preceded the sovereign, as before. The procession moved to the great west door of the chapel, up the south aisle, and out at the south door of the upper castle; but the proxy went in the procession no farther than the south door, where the mantle of his principal was delivered to the sexton.

The drums and trumpets continued in the procession until the return to the king's guard-chamber. The poor knights and prebends filed off on either side in the grand chamber. The officers of arms, and the four serjeants-at-arms, in the presence-chamber. The knights companions divided on either side in the royal apartment. The sovereign, having the officers of the order before him, went under the state, where he saluted the knights, by pulling off his cap, and then retired till dinner time.

When the first service was placed on the tables of the sovereign and knights, a procession was made to Saint George's Hall, in the following order.

The officers of arms, the knights in their order, the officers of the order, the lord chamberlain, the sword of state, the sovereign.

The officers of arms divided at the lower end of the hall, the knights above them in a line, according to their seniority, the senior nearest to the state, taking off their caps and feathers, as the sovereign passed. The officers of the order proceeded before the sovereign to the haut-pas, and then went behind the knights.

The sovereign, being under his state, saluted the knights; and the princes of the blood royal ascended the haut-pas, and stood at the ends of the table; the Prince of Wales on his majesty's right hand; and the other princes of the blood according to their rank.

Grace being said by the prelate, the sovereign sat down, and the knights put on their caps, and were conducted, by the officers of arms, to their places at the table. The proxy took his place below the junior knight.

A table was placed at the lower end of the hall, for the officers of the order.

Towards the latter end of the first course, a large gilt cup being brought to the sovereign, by the Earl of Uxbridge acting as cup bearer, his majesty commanded Garter to signify to the knights that he drank to them, who thereupon standing up uncovered, altogether pledged the sovereign; during which time, the trumpets sounded, and there was a discharge of cannon. The knights then sat down, and put on their caps.

The second course was then brought to the sovereign's table, with the usual ceremony, preceded by the lord steward, and by several officers of his majesty's household; and to the table of the knights, by the yeomen of the guard.

Immediately after, Garter, attended by all the officers of arms, advanced from the lower end of the hall, with the usual reverences to the haut-pas; and he, ascending the lowest step, and crying "Largesse" thrice, proclaimed the sovereign's style in Latin, French, and English.

The officers of arms then retired backwards, with the usual reverences. Garter, and the officers of arms, then cried "Largesse" thrice.

Then Garter bowed to the Duke of Rutland, who standing up uncovered, Garter, with one "Largesse" proclaimed his grace's style in English. Garter, and the officers of arms, then cried "Largesse" once.

In like manner, Garter proclaimed the styles of the Earl of Hardwicke, the Duke of Beaufort, the Marquess of Abercorn, the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Winchelsea, and the Earl of Chesterfield.

The banquet was afterwards brought up to the tables of the sovereign and knights, with the same ceremony as the second course.

Their royal highnesses and princes of the blood were each attended during the dinner, by a knight of the most honourable order of the Bath, in the collar of that order. Dinner being ended, the knights placed themselves in a line, as before dinner; and grace being said by the prelate, and the sovereign having washed, the knights altogether made their reverences to his majesty, who put off his cap and saluted them.

Then the knights and officers returned to the presence-chamber before the sovereign, in the same order in which they came from thence.

GENEROSITY, a Prussian order, instituted in 1685, by Frederick III. Elector of Brandenburg, afterwards King of Prussia. The badge was a gold cross of eight points enamelled blue; on the upper part or limb was the letter F, ensigned with an electoral cap in enamel; on the dexter limb, GENE; on the sinister, ROSI; and TÉ on the bottom. In the four principal angles, as many golden eagles, with wings expanded. This badge was worn pendent round the neck from a blue ribbon. See Pl. 4, fig. 4.

GENET. This order was instituted in 726, by Charles Martel, to commemorate a great victory over the Saracens, under their leader Abdiramo. Favin mentions it as the first order of knighthood known in France, though others assert the contrary; it nevertheless continued in great estimation from the time of its institution, until the Carolinian race were driven from the throne by Hugh Capet, when it sunk gradually, and at last became extinct in the reign of his son Robert, who founded in its stead the order of the Star, in honour of the Holy Virgin. The number of knights was limited to sixteen, who were of the first rank in the kingdom. The badge of the order was, a genet, sejant, enamelled az. spotted or, freckled gu. collared gold, on a mount vert, enamelled with flowers ppr. This badge was worn pendent to a collar, composed of three chains of gold, interlaced with red enamelled roses, to the centre of which the badge was affixed by two smaller gold chains. See Pl. 4, fig. 8.

GOLDEN ANGEL, or ST. GEORGE, in Italy. This order is said to have been instituted in 312, by Constantine the Great; but it owes its origin, with more probability, to the princes of the imperial house of Commenes, of whom it is said that thirty-four have successively been grand masters of it. But however doubtful these points, the order certainly fell for some time into disuse, and was revived by Charles V. who declared himself grand master, and appointed his natural son, Don John of Austria, his deputy. The order was divided into three classes. First, The grand collars, who were fifty in number, and who had the regulation of all the others. Second, The profest knights and barristers. Third, The knights in waiting. The collar is composed of fifteen oval plates of gold, richly chased on the edges, and enamelled blue. On fourteen of these plates, is the cypher of the name of Christ, consisting of the Greek capital letters X and P, between the two capitals, A and Ω, signifying that Jesus Christ is the beginning and end; but on the centre oval, which is edged with laurel-leaves, the cypher X P is placed on a cross patonce gules, edged or, and having on its points the letters I. H. S. V. pendent from the bottom, was the figure of St. George killing the dragon. See Pl. 4, fig. 3.

The habit of the knights was a long cloak of sky-blue coloured velvet, lined with white silk, tied at the neck with a cord of crimson silk and gold thread intermixed, terminating at each extremity in a large tassel. On the left breast of the cloak was embroidered the cross of the order. See Pl. 4, fig. 17, and Pl. 3, fig. 21.

GOLDEN EAGLE. See CHASE.

GOLDEN FLEECE, which is both an Austrian and Spanish order, was instituted 10th January, 1429, by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy and Brabant, and Earl of Flanders, being the day of his marriage with his third wife, the Infanta Isabella, of Portugal. The duke set so high a value on this order, that he took for his motto the words, Autre a' auray, which, in the old French language, means, I will have; or, I will wear none other; and contrary to the rules generally observed in most orders of knighthood, especially on the Continent, the knights of this order, at least the Austrian branch of it, are not precluded on account of family or rank, it being particularly set forth in the statute, "that whoever is the object of the choice of the sovereign, possesses, in virtue of his so being, every requisite which may entitle him to his admission therein."

At the second festival of the order, which took place in 1431, the statutes were promulgated; in one of which it is declared, that in case the House of Burgundy should leave no male heir, the husband of the female inheriting the earldom of Flanders, shall be chief of the order.

After the death of Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, his only daughter, Mary, married Maximilian, Archduke of Austria, afterwards Emperor of Germany; upon which the sovereignty of the Low Countries, and the grand mastership of this order, passed to the House of Austria.

In 1556, after the abdication of Charles V. grandson of Maximilian, the Spanish branch of the House of Austria remained in possession of the Low Countries, and continued grand masters of the order, till that branch of the family became extinct by the death of Charles II. King of Spain, when Philip, Duke of Anjou, and Charles, Archduke of Austria, disputed the Spanish crown, and both assumed the grand mastership of this order. Charles could not maintain himself in the possession of Spain, but he obtained the Spanish Netherlands, and immediately exercised the right of conferring the order of the Golden Fleece, on the fundamental principle of the original institution, that the grand mastership appertained unalienably to the prince in possession of the earldom of Flanders; and upon which principle the Archduke Maximilian, in right of his wife, the heiress of Burgundy and Flanders; Philip the Handsome, King of Castile; the Emperor Charles V.; Philip II.; Philip III.; Philip IV.; and Charles II. kings of Spain, had all conferred this order, as actual possessors of the earldom of Flanders.

Upon the return of Charles, Archduke of Austria, to Vienna, in 1713, from the Spanish Netherlands, (whither he had taken the archives of the order, upon his quitting Spain,) he celebrated the re-establishment of the order with great pomp; but Philip, Duke of Anjou, who had disputed with him the crown of Spain, and become sovereign of that kingdom, likewise declared himself grand master; and at the congress held at Cambray, presented a solemn protest against the Archduke of Austria, (who had become Emperor of Germany) exercising the prerogatives attached to the grand mastership, which, he contended, appertained solely to the crown of Spain.

In the treaty signed at Vienna in 1726, it was agreed that each of them, during his life, should enjoy the titles assumed; but that their successors should assume none others, except those which appertained to the states which they really possessed; and among these titles, the grand mastership of the order was tacitly included. On the death of the Emperor Charles VI. Philip V. again presented a protest against the Archduchess Maria-Thérèse, Queen of Hungary and Bohemia, Duchess of Brabant, and Countess of Flanders, the eldest daughter and sole heiress of the emperor, for having transferred to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, her consort, her claims or rights to the dignity.

In 1748, when peace was concluded by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, France proposed, that the dispute relative to this object should, on that occasion, be laid aside. Ferdinand VI. King of Spain, strenuously maintained, however, that the grand mastership belonged to Spain alone; and Maria-Thérèse holding the same claim in favour of the Emperor Francis I. the matter remained in statu quo, since the parties concerned would not come to any settlement.

Austria and Spain have since enjoyed an equal right, with respect to the creation of knights of this order.

The number of knights is not limited in Spain; but it has seldom exceeded seventy or eighty. On its first institution, it consisted of only thirty knights, including the sovereign; and although the occasion of its institution has been the subject of controversy amongst antiquarians, it has ever been ranked with the most illustrious and distinguished orders of knighthood in Europe.

The knights usually wear a golden fleece pendent to a broad red ribbon round the neck, but on ceremonial days it is attached to a collar composed of double steels, interwoven with flint-stones emitting sparks of fire; the whole enamelled in their proper colours. The fusils are joined two and two together, somewhat resembling double B's, the cyphers of Burgundy; and the flint-stones represent the ancient arms of the sovereigns of Burgundy, of the first race, with their motto, Ante ferit quam flamma micet. The motto of the order is, Præteritum non vilo laborum. See Pl. 4, fig. 19.

There are four great officers, viz. a chancellor, treasurer, register, and king of arms, called Toison d'or.

The Austrian part of the order is limited to fifty-one, the number appointed by Charles V.; but in all other respects, the statutes, insignia, &c. are exactly the same in both. The order underwent but little or no change during the space of nearly four centuries, excepting the augmentation of its number, and the substitution of a ribbon on ordinary occasions, instead of the collar, which was formerly worn daily, but afterwards only on particular festivals or days of ceremony.

The habit of the order consists of a long mantle and a cap of crimson velvet, which are lined with white lustring; the mantle is entirely bordered with the insignia of the order; viz. flint-stones and fire-steels disposed alternately: the former surrounded with sparks or flames of fire, and pendent gold fleeces, worked in rich embroidery. The vest and small-clothes are of plain white silk.

GOLDEN LION, of Hesse-Cassel, instituted 14th August, 1770, by Frederick II. Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, K.G. who married the Princess Mary, daughter of his Britannic Majesty George II.

The reigning Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel is invariably sovereign grand master. The badge, prior to 1815, was a lion ramp. within a ring or broad fillet of gold, of an oval form, inscribed on one side with the motto, Virtute et Fidelitate; and on the other, Fredricus II. D. G. Hesiæ Landgravius Inst. 1770. See Pl. 4, fig. 20.

The order, which is both civil and military, was at first composed of only one class, limited to the number of forty-one knights; but on the first of June, 1816, the Elector, William I. added a second class, for admission of persons of less elevated rank; the first being of high birth, occupying some important office, and with military men not conferred under the rank of lieutenant-general, and who must have previously obtained the order of Military Virtue. The badge before described, was borne by the grand crosses scarfways from right to left, pendent to a broad deep crimson-coloured watered ribbon. The commanders wearing it suspended from around the neck.

The grand crosses likewise wear a silver star of eight points, the four central rays of which are somewhat longer than the angular ones: in the middle, on an azure field, is the Hessian lion ramp. bary of ten, ar. and gu. encircled with a fillet of deep crimson-coloured velvet, with the motto, Virtute et Fidelitate, embroidered in silver letters. See Pl. 4, fig. 7. This star is worn on the left side of their mantles, or upper garments; the habit of the order being of the ancient German knightly costume.

In 1816, another badge was given to the grand crosses, viz. a golden cross of eight points, enamelled gu. with a bordure ar.; on a circular centre, also ar. a lion ramp. or, with an imperial crown over the head, surrounded with a fillet of crimson, bearing the inscription, Virtute et Fidelitate, encircled with eight points, or rays, az. the cross suspended from a crown of gold, attached by a ring from a broad red ribbon. See Pl. 5, fig. 1. And to the commanders a similar badge, the centre being oval-shaped instead of circular, omitting the rays round the fillet, and the crown over the cross. See Pl. 5, fig. 5.

GOLDEN SHIELD. See OUR LADY OF THE THISTLE.

GOLDEN SPUR, in Rome. An order supposed to have been instituted in 1559, by Pope Pius IV. They are styled in the brevet of nomination, Chevaliers de la Malice Dorée; and at other times, Comtes-Palatins du sacre Palais de Latran; but no benefice nor pension is attached to the order. It is granted as a mark of distinction, to those employed in the pontifical government, artists, and others, whom the pope should think deserving of reward. It is likewise given to strangers, no other condition being required but that of professing the Catholic religion.

The pope's nuncio; the prelates, members of the supreme court; and some other Roman prelates, have each the right of nominating two knights of the Golden Spur.

The badge of the superior class is, an eight pointed cross, with a pointed ray between each of the principal angles; and on the upper limb, Bene; dexter limb, Mer; and on the sinister, enti. The limbs on the reverse bearing Ex Dono, with the name and date when presented. On the top of the cross, an imperial crown, (by which it is attached to trophies of war, affixed to a red ribbon) and at the bottom of the badge is a small spur; the whole being of gold, and worn round the neck. See Pl. 5, fig. 3.

The smaller badge, which is worn from the button-hole pendent to a narrow red ribbon, is of the same form; but the cross is enamelled white, without inscription, and is suspended by a ring from the top of the crown, and not from trophies, as in the larger. See Pl. 4, fig. 21.

The superior class of the order likewise wear a silver star, with rays, in the form of the badge; on a circular centre azure, bordered with white, is a golden spur, surrounded with a red fillet, edged with gold, bearing the inscription, Bene. Mer. enti, in letters of the same metal. See Pl. 5, fig. 7.

GOLDEN STOLE, or STOLA D'ORO, of Venice, an order conferred by the Senate of the Republic of Venice on persons descended from the oldest nobility of the state, or those who have filled with honour the important post of ambassador on some extraordinary occasion.

These Cavalieri della Stola d'Oro, or Knights of the Golden Stole, are so called on account of the decorations they wear, which consists of a stole of gold tissue, richly embroidered with flowers of gold in relief. It is of the breadth of the hand, worn over the shoulder, and hanging down before, as low as the knees. The knights likewise wear a habit, called a ducal robe, consisting of a long gown of red stuff, taffeta, or damask, with long sleeves reaching to the ground. Their under garments are of crimson; and in winter, the robe was lined and turned up with rich furs. They were formerly obliged to wear this habit during eight days following their promotion, and to attend on the person of the Doge, or pay a fine of five hundred ducats; but in 1631, this custom was dispensed with, and the habit only worn on particular ceremonial days. On other occasions, they clothed themselves as they pleased; but always wearing a long surtout over their usual apparel, which in summer was made of crimson lustring or taffeta; and in winter, of cloth or velvet, made fast round the waist with a fringed girdle of the same, with buttons of gold; wearing every day the embroidered stole before described. The cap is of cloth, with silk fringe, and lined with taffeta, all black, like that worn by other persons of distinction.

GRIFFIN. The order of the Griffin, called Florida, is said to have been instituted in 1489, by Alphonso, King of Naples; the particulars of which are unknown, or when it ceased to exist.

GURLEPHS. This Hanoverian order was founded 12 Aug. 1816, by his present Majesty George IV. then Prince Regent, to commemorate the raising of Hanover into a kingdom, and its admission into the number of sovereign states. It is intended to reward those persons, who have performed any signal service to their king and country, without any limitation of number. It derives its name from that of the royal family of England, whose ancestors have long possessed the sovereignty of Hanover, and, as early as the time of Charlemagne, were distinguished as Counts of Altorf.

The King of Hanover is grand master of the order, which is composed of three classes, and into which both civil and military men are admitted; viz. grand crosses, commanders, and knights. The military grand crosses must, before admission, have attained the rank of lieutenant-general at least; and the commanders, that of major-general; but the third class, or knights, are without restriction as to rank.

The minister of the court of Hanover, in London, is chancellor of the order: the senior privy-counsellor in Hanover, is vice-chancellor; and the secretary of chancery in Hanover, resident in London, is secretary of the order.

A chapter is held once a year to decide the claims of candidates for admission. No usual service, however exemplary and honourable, constitutes a claim to this distinction; but only such exploits as are out of the regular course of duty, and which might have been omitted without incurring any blame.

The arms of all the members of the order are placed in the chapel of the castle of Hanover, and in the hall of the knights.

The badge of the military grand crosses, military commanders, and military knights, only differ in size, according to the class, and is, a golden cross of eight points; on the top of the upper limb are two swords in saltier, and above them, the Hanoverian crown, by which it is suspended from the collar or ribbon: between the principal angles of the cross, are four lions passant, guardant, the two in chief, and those in base respecting each other; on a circular centre gules, a horse, current, argent, upon a mount vert, encircled with a fillet azure, bearing the motto, Nec aspera terrent, in letters of gold, and surrounded with a chaplet of laurel vert. See Pl. 4, fig. 9. On the reverse, on a centre, is a double cypher of G. R.

ensigned with the crown; and upon the bottom of the fillet, which is of gold, the year of its foundation, viz. MDCCCXV, as in the same Pl. fig. 13.

The badge of the civil grand crosses, commanders, and knights, are also alike; but differing only in size, according to the class. This badge has the crown on the top of the upper limb of the cross, without the swords, by which it is suspended; and excepting that a wreath of oak-leaves is substituted in the place of the laurel chaplet, the whole is every way similar to that of the military members of the order before described. See Pl. 4, fig. 13. The badge, on ordinary occasions, is worn by the grand crosses pendent from a sky-blue-coloured ribbon scarfways from left to right; and commanders suspend the badge from the ribbon worn round the neck. The badge of a knight is worn pendent by a sky-blue ribbon and gold buckle from the button-hole. See Pl. 4, fig. 16. The collar, which is worn by the grand crosses, both civil and military, is of gold, formed alternately, first, of the royal crown of Hanover, with a lion passant, guardant, on either side; and secondly, of a double cypher G. R.; these are linked together by small chains, and from the centre crown is suspended the badge. See Pl. 4, fig. 2.

The star worn by the military grand crosses, is of eight points, orrays, embroidered in silver, surmounted by two swords of gold in saltier, the hilts and blades forming the centre of the four angular rays; on the middle of the star is the horse argent, on a mount vert, in a field gules, encircled with a fillet azure, bearing the motto, Nec aspera terrent, and surrounded with a chaplet of laurel vert. See Pl. 4, fig. 10.

The star of the civil grand crosses differs from the last, in the omission of the swords in saltier, and a wreath of oak-leaves being substituted in the place of the chaplet of laurel. See Pl. 4, fig. 11.

The star worn by the military commanders, is, a silver cross of eight points, with two swords in saltier, the hilts and blades appearing between the principal angles; the centre of the cross being the same as that in the star of the military grand crosses. See Pl. 4, fig. 14.

The star of the civil commanders differs from the last, in the omission of the swords, and the substituting a wreath of oak instead of the laurel chaplet. See Pl. 4, fig. 15.

The first and second classes encircle their arms with the ribbon and motto, surrounded by the laurel or oak chaplet, to denote whether military or civil members; and the grand crosses likewise encompass the arms with the collar.

HAPPY ALLIANCE OF SAXE-HILDBURGHAUSEN. This order was instituted 1st October, 1749, by his serene highness Frederick Christian-Ernest, Duke of Saxe-Hildburghausen, to commemorate his nuptials with Louisa, Princess royal of Denmark, daughter of Christian VI. and of the Princess Sophia-Magdalena, of Brandenburg-Bayreuth, who instituted the order of Fidelity.

It was conferred only on general and field-officers, actual privy counsellors, chamberlains, and gentlemen of the chamber.

The badge of the order is a small Maltese cross, of gold, enamelled white; on the upper and lower quarters appears the duke's cypher, F. C. E. in gold letters, and the extremities are surmounted with two regal crowns; on the upper quarters are the cyphers of the duchess, L. L. likewise in gold letters, and the extremities are each surmounted with a ducal crown, of red enamel, turned up ermine. In the four principal angles, is a radiant glory of gold, and in the middle an escutcheon of gold, on which are the arms of Saxony, impaled with those of Norway. On the reverse of the centre, is a star; on the upper and lower quarters of the cross are engraven the words, Fidélité et constance, the motto of the order; and on the lateral quarters, 1st October, 1749, the date of the foundation. The badge is worn pendent round the neck from a rich, rose-coloured, watered ribbon, of the breadth of two fingers, with a narrow bordure of silver.

HATCHET, LADIES OF THE ORDER OF THE, instituted in 1149, by Raymond Berenger, Count of Barcelona, in honour of the women of Tortoza, who had saved the town, and repulsed the Moors who besieged it. The badge was a small hatchet.

HELMET, or IRON CASQUE. This order was instituted 18th March, 1814, by George William, Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, on a plan similar to that of the Iron Cross of Prussia, to recompense faithful services rendered during the war of 1814.

The order was divided into three classes; viz. grand crosses, commanders, and knights, of the first and second class.

No person could attain the first class of this order, without having passed successively through the inferior classes; nor could any one be nominated to the first class but general officers, who had commanded the Hessian troops in battle, or taken or defended some post of importance, or for some other brilliant achievement.

The order has not been given to any person since the conclusion of the war (for which it was purposely created) and no grand crosses were ever made of this order.

The badge was, a cross botonnée of iron, edged with silver, on the centre of which was an open-fronted helmet of the same metal, garnished with silver. It was suspended by a ring from a red ribbon edged with blue, and worn at the button-hole on the left side. See Pl. 5, fig. 2.

HOLY CROSS. See TEUTONIC ORDER.

HOLY GHOST, in France. This order was instituted on Whitsunday, in 1578, by Henry III. King of France; a day particularly auspicious to him, from having, on that day, in 1573, been elected King of Poland; and in the following year, on the same day, succeeded to the throne of France, on the death of his brother, Charles IX.

On the first institution of the order, the king conferred upon the knights the title of commanders, it being his majesty's intention to bestow on each of them a commandery, assigned upon the ecclesiastical benefices, in the same manner as practised in Spain; but the pope and clergy refused their consent to the measure.

The king declared himself grand master, and annexed that dignity to the crown of France; but owing to the civil wars which distracted the kingdom, during the reign of this prince, the order was considerably diminished. King Henry IV. renewed it in 1590, and augmented and embellished its characteristic ensigns. The order is, in France, simply designated, Le Cordon bleu.

The principal festival was observed on the 31st Dec.; the king and the knights formerly assembling in the church of the Augustines, at Paris, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The collar of the order, on its first institution, was composed of a fleur-de-lis or, cantoned with flames of the same, enamelled gules, interspersed with three cyphers, or monograms, of gold, composed of the letters H and L, enamelled white; being the initials of the founder's name, and that of his wife, Louisa of Lorraine; but Henry IV. altered the cypher into a trophy of arms.

The collar worn by the knights and lay-commanders, is now composed of fleurs-de-lis or, cantoned with flames enamelled gu.; an open helmet, surrounded with military trophies, enamelled ppr.; and the letter H, surmounted with the crown, and with ducal coronets on each side, in gold, cantoned with flames; the which devises are alternately linked together by golden chains. See Pl. 5, fig. 11.

The badge is a gold cross of eight points, enamelled, with an edge or border of white, with a fleur-de-lis in each angle or; on a circular centre vert, a dove ar. the wings, tail, and head, (downwards) extended over part of the principal quarters of the cross. See Pl. 5, fig. 4. On the reverse of the cross, is represented St. Michael, trampling on the dragon, all ppr. This cross is attached to the collar; but on ordinary occasions, worn by the lay commanders and knights, pendent to a sky-blue coloured ribbon, scarfways from right to left; but officers who are not commanders, and ecclesiastic commanders, wear it pendent from the neck; and the badge has a dove on each side, and not St. Michael and the dragon on the reverse, as that worn by the lay-commanders and knights. The star is of silver, formed exactly like the cross. See Pl. 5, fig. 14. It is worn on the left side of the upper garment, by all the members of the order.

On particular ceremonial days, the under dress of a knight is of white silk and silver tissue; over it, is a long mantle of black velvet, lined with rich orange-coloured tabby. This mantle is bestrewed with gold flames in embroidery, and surrounded with a bordure, composed of fleurs-de-lis of gold and silver lacs d'amour, and other ornaments, ranged alternately; besides which, they wear a short green mantle of cloth, of silver; it is bestrewed with doves in silver embroidery, and lined with rich orange-coloured tabby. The device, or motto, is, Duce et auspice.

The number of persons admitted into the order is, by the statutes, limited to one hundred, exclusive of the sovereign, or grand master. Of these, four cardinals, four archbishops or bishops, and the grand almoner of France, are styled commanders, and are of no other order.

The knights must profess the Roman Catholic religion, and cannot enter the service, or receive pension, pay, or estates, from any foreign prince, nor make engagements with any person, without especial permission from the king. They must likewise prove the nobility of their descent for one hundred years; but this proof is unnecessary with commanders, whose offices or honours are commonly sold at a regulated price. For admission as a knight, it is necessary that the person should have attained the age of thirty-three years, and have been first admitted into the order of St. Michael; but although this restriction, as to age, does not apply to princes of the blood, even such cannot be admitted until they have been received into the order of St. Michael; the dauphin excepted, who, on the day of his birth, is considered of both orders. The commanders, if ecclesiastics, are called Commandeurs de l'Ordre du St. Esprit; if laymen, Commandeurs des Ordres du Roy; and the knights, Chevaliers des Ordres du Roy.

The kings of France are, unalienably, sovereigns, or grand masters, of this order; but cannot exercise the functions until after coronation, when he is installed sovereign of the order, with much ceremony.

The revenues arising from the Droit du marc d'or, were appropriated to this order, and every knight and commander received a pension sufficient to pay his poll-tax, or capitation, and, being considered as the first nobility, were rated accordingly, and taxed at three thousand livres tournois.

The oath and vow made by the king. "We, Henry, by the grace of God, King of France and of Poland, do solemnly swear and vow, on this book, in our hands, to God the Creator, to live and die in the holy Catholic and apostolic faith and religion, as to every good and most Christian king it belongeth, and rather to die than fail in any time therein. We swear also to maintain for ever the order of the Holy Ghost, founded and instituted by us, without suffering it to shrink, fall, or diminish, so long as it remaineth in our power to help it; to observe the statutes and ordinances of the said order, truly and entirely, according to their tenure and form; and to cause them to be kept exactly by all such as are and shall be received into the said order hereafter. Moreover, never to contradict, nor disperse, nor attempt to alter and change the irrevocable statutes thereof, particularly those which are here mentioned."

The commanders answer to the king.—I swear and vow to God, in the face of his church, and promise to you, sir, upon my faith and honour, that I will live and die in the faith and religion catholic, without ever departing from it or the union of our holy mother, the church apostolic.

1. That I will bear to your majesty entire and perfect obedience, without failing in any part of my duty, as a good and loyal subject ought to do.

2. That I will keep, defend, and maintain, (to my uttermost power) the honour, the quarrels, and rights of your royal majesty, to all and against all whatsoever.

3. That in times of war, I will yield myself to follow you, in the furnishment or equipage of horses and arms, as I am bound to do by the statutes of the order.

4. In the times of peace, when any occasion of importance shall present itself, at all times, and as often as you shall please to command me, I will do you service against any person that can live and die, without exception of any, and even to death itself.

5. That on such occasions, I will never leave nor abandon your person, or the place where you have appointed me to do you service, without your express leave and license, or command, signified with your own hand, or of him whom you shall ordain me to obey, standing free from all other objections, but upon just and lawful occasions.

6. That I will never go forth of your kingdom, especially to go into the service of any strange prince, without your command. And I will never take pension, wages, nor benefit, of any other king, prince, potentate, or lord whatsoever, nor bind myself to the service of any other person living, but to your majesty only, except it be by your express permission.

7. That I will faithfully reveal to you whatsoever I shall know hereafter to import your service, the estate and conversation of this present order of the Holy Ghost, wherewith it hath pleased your majesty to honour me.

8. That I will never consent, nor ever permit, (so much as in me lieth) that any thing shall be innovated or attempted against the service of God, nor against your royal authority, nor to the prejudice of this order, which I will labour to my uttermost power to augment and maintain.

9. That I will keep and observe, most religiously, all the statutes and ordinances thereof.

10. That I will continually wear the cross upon my uppermost garments, and that of gold, about my neck, as I am enjoined by the statutes.

11. And that I will be personally present at all the assemblies and general chapters of the order, so often as you shall please to command me; or else acquaint you with my just excuses, which I shall never hold for good or lawful except they be approved and authorized by your majesty, with the advice of most part of the commanders, which shall be nearest to take knowledge of them; signed with your royal hand, and sealed with the seal of the order, whereof I am to have an act. All these things I vow and swear, so help me God, and on this book of his blessed evangelists.

HOLY GHOST. This order was instituted at Montpellier, in France, in 1198, under the appellation of Hospitalers, by Count Guy, to relieve sick and poor; and Pope Innocent III. formed, at the celebrated hospital of St. Mary at Rome, a similar establishment, under the direction of the said count. These hospitalers were soon afterwards changed into military knights; but the office of grand master became a subject of dispute, which contributed to the decay of the order; and Clement XIII. united it to the order of St. Lazarus. The badge was a cross of twelve points, enamelled, az. the centre circular, and on it a dove, with wings expanded, the head downwards, ar. See Pl. 5, fig. 10.

HOLY PHIAL, or DE LA SAINTE AMPOUILLE, called also the Order of St. Remi. This order was instituted in 490, by Clovis, King of France; the reigning kings being always sovereigns of this order; and the knights companions only four in number, an honour which has been generally conferred on Barons Terrier, Belstre, Venstre, and Louverse, who stile themselves baron knights of the Holy Phial, and are the bearers of the canopy under which the Phial is carried from the abbey of St. Remi to the cathedral of Rheims, for the inauguration of the kings of France at their coronation. They wear, pendent to a black ribbon around their necks, a cross of gold, enamelled white, cantoned with four fleurs-de-lis; on the cross, a dove descending, wings expanded, dipping its head into a phial held in a hand, all ppr. See Pl. 5, fig. 16.

At the coronation, these barons or knights are delivered to the dean, priors, and chapters of the cathedral church at St. Remi, as hostages for fulfilling the engagements entered into by the great officers of the crown, to return the holy phial, in which the oil for anointing the king at the coronation is kept.

This custom is said to have arisen from a superstitious legendary tale, that this phial and oil were brought from heaven by the Holy Ghost, under the form of a dove, and put into the hand of St. Remi, at the coronation of Clovis, and have been ever since preserved and considered as a precious relic by the bigots of the Romish church.

HOLY SEPULCHRE OF JERUSALEM. See ST. SEPULCHRE.

HOSPITALERS OF ST. JOHN OF JERUSALEM. This is the earliest and most correct title of an order which, from circumstances that will be related, has also been known by the name of Knights of Rhodes, and Knights of Malta. It may be said to have had a double foundation, from the first of which it took its name, and from the second, that form under which it afterwards became so famous in history. Some time before the first crusade, several merchants of Melphis, in the kingdom of Naples, who traded to the Levant, obtained leave from the Caliph of Egypt, to build a house at Jerusalem for themselves and countrymen, who should go in pilgrimage there, on condition of paying an annual tribute. Having thus gained an establishment there, they built two oratories, and received pilgrims according to their original design, with a charity, which, in the circumstances of the times, was very serviceable. The example was followed by others; and it was found that their charitable purpose would be more completely fulfilled by providing for the relief of the sick, whom, no doubt, the privations and difficulties of a long journey caused to be very numerous. An hospital therefore was founded, and at the same time a church, which was dedicated to St. John; and hence, the community took the title of Hospitalers of St. John of Jerusalem. After the conquest of the Holy Land by the crusaders, they undertook a more active assistance of the pilgrims, whom they bound themselves by a vow to defend against their enemies, the Saracens, as well as to succour in sickness. This alteration, which may be considered as the foundation of this order of knighthood, took place in 1104, when Baldwin was King of Jerusalem; and from that time they became partly a military order, and changed their name to knights, or rather, added that to their original title. Now, that the profession of arms became part of their duty, many men of quality became members of the order; but the laws, by which it was made exclusively noble, and many other of its regulations, were not framed until afterwards. Their first body of written statutes was given them by Raymond de Puy, and confirmed by Pope Boniface. When the affairs of the Christians were ruined in the east, and Jerusalem retaken, they were obliged to quit the seat of their first establishment, and retired to Margatt, and then to Acre, which they valiantly, but unsuccessfully, defended in 1290. Having now no abode of their own, their services recommended them to John, King of Cyprus, who gave them Limison, in his dominions. Here they remained for twenty years, and then, in 1310, under their grand master, Folques du Villaret, conquered for themselves Rhodes, which, a year afterwards, they nobly defended against an army of Saracens, under their grand master, Ame, Duke of Savoy; and in memorial of his bravery, his successors have borne as a device, the letters F. E. R. T. being the initials of the words, Fortitudo ejus Rhodum tenuit. They now took the title of Knights of Rhodes; and their noble defences of that island are recorded in history: but at last the Turks succeeded, and Solymán took the island in 1522. The knights then retired into Candia, thence to Sicily, and Pope Adrian VI. granted them the city of Viterbo, where they remained till 1539, when the Emperor Charles V. having conquered Malta, offered it to them, which they accepted with the consent of other princes, in whose dominions they had possessions. Charles wished to make Malta a bulwark for his Italian dominions against the Turks; and the knights proved they were equal to the charge, when their grand master, John la Valette Parisot, successfully maintained a siege of four months, in which the Turks suffered an immense loss. For the assistance which the knights furnished to Charles V. in his African war, that Emperor granted them the privilege of importing corn and other provisions from Sicily, duty free. From this time they remained the acknowledged possessors and protectors of the island of Malta, of which the grand master of the order, assisted by his council of grand crosses, was sovereign, though subordinate to the kings of Spain, to whom he was bound to present a falcon every year; and suppression of pirates was part of his duty, stipulated for by Charles V.

Maximilian Joseph, Elector of Bavaria, deprived the knights of their privileges, and sequestered their estates; but Paul, the Emperor of Russia, constituted himself grand master, took them under his protection, and, at his instigation, all their rights were restored. This took place in 1799; in which same year Malta was taken by Bonaparte's Egyptian expedition, and the knights retired to Trieste, and afterwards to Messina and Catania. At the treaty of Amiens, Malta was in possession of British troops, and, by that treaty, was to have been restored to the knights; but the war that followed rendered the fulfilment of that clause unadvisable; and by the treaty of 1814, the island, with all its dependencies, was ceded in full sovereignty to Great Britain, and the order of St. John, in a very reduced state, has continued under the protection of Russia.

Raymond de Puy, who, in 1130, first took the title of master of the order, divided it into three classes; knights, chaplains, and servants at arms. There are members attached to the order, called donnes, or demi crosses; others called priests of obedience, who officiate in the churches; and friar-servants, who assist at the offices. None of these are considered constituent parts of the order; and such of them as are laymen are therefore allowed to marry.

The first class must give proof of noble descent for four generations, both on the father and mother's side; a condition which is sometimes dispensed with, more frequently for a defect on the mother's side; but in both cases, the dispensation must be obtained by the pope's brief, or a general chapter of the order. Legitimate birth is of course included in the condition of nobility; but an exception is made in favour of the natural sons of kings and princes. The second rank of chaplains or conventional priests, are also of noble extraction, or at least of considerable families: the ecclesiastical dignities of Malta were conferred on them, many of whom have been cardinals. The third rank, consisting of servants at arms, or knight's servants, are also of noble extraction; but it is not necessary that they should be so far as four generations. The knights consisted once of eight languages or nations, of which England was sixth; but after that country withdrew, the number was not filled up, and continued to be seven. Of these, the first is Provence, whose chief is grand commandater of the religion; the second, Auvergne, whose chief is marshal of the order; the third, France, whose chief is grand hospitaler; the fourth, Italy, whose chief is admiral; the fifth, Arragon, and their chief, grand conservator; the sixth, Germany, and their chief, grand bailiff of the order; the seventh, Castile, and their chief, grand chancellor. When England was one, its chief was grand marcopolier, or colonel of the cavalry. Each nation has several grand priories, and every grand priory a certain number of commanderies. As sovereign of the Island of Malta, the grand master had the power of coining money, and pardoning criminals; and, as the head of the order, he had the nomination of grand priors, bailiffs, commendators, and knights, who are all obliged to obey him in whatsoever is not contrary to the rule and statutes of the order. Before the loss of Malta, his revenue was 10,000 ducats, besides a liberal allowance from the common treasury. In affairs of importance, the absolute power resides in the sacred council, in which the grand master has two voices. This council is ordinarily composed of the grand crosses only; but on extraordinary occasions, is attended by the two eldest knights of each nation. The grand master was accustomed to be served by sixteen pages, from twelve to sixteen years of age, of whom a constant succession was kept up.

While the privileges of the order remained, their method of electing a grand master was as follows: so soon as the grand master was known to be dead, all communication from the island was stopped, to prevent any attempt at the exercise of improper influence from other powers. The several seminaries immediately appointed two knights, each of their own nation; and of these sixteen, by agreement among themselves, eight withdrew, and left the other eight to proceed with the election; these eight then nominated, a knight, a priest, and a serving brother, who, from among the sixteen grand crosses, chose their grand master.

The statutes require that the candidates should be sixteen years of age before they can be received into this order: they enter into the novitiate at seventeen, and make profession at eighteen. They must first present themselves to the grand chapter, or the provincial assembly of their grand priory; and the proofs of nobility for four descents on both sides, if not dispensed with, must be made by arms and registers, signed by the grand prior within whose jurisdiction the candidate was born, by whom they are sent to the seat of government, and there undergo another examination by the knights of that particular nation, who have the power to reject them. If they pass, the standing of the knight is reckoned from that day; and a fee of 250 crowns in gold must be paid by him into the treasury of the order; besides the right of the language into which he is admitted, according to the rank in which he enters, as, of full age, page or minor. For although sixteen is the legal age, their names and proofs are frequently received before, sometimes as pages to the grand master, for which service they are qualified from twelve to sixteen; and sometimes without any such duty. The fees are greater in proportion to the youth of the minor; for the admission of whose name, when only one year old, (which has been the case) the expenses are 4000 livres. It is not enough that the candidate's predecessors, for four generations, have been nobly born; they must not have derogated from their nobility by merchandise or traffic, excepting natives of Genoa and Sienna, to whom such things are not considered debasing. None of the other classes, nor yet ecclesiastics, though qualified in other respects, are eligible for the rank of knights.

The churchmen, of whom the second rank consists, are first admitted as deacons, or clerks conventual, to serve in the church, from ten to fifteen years of age. They must prove that they have been legally baptized, and that their parents are respectable: their fee is 100 crowns in gold, besides the right of the language. When admitted as chaplains, this fee is doubled; and the same sum is required of the servants at arms.

The three vows of the order, required of every member, are, obedience, poverty, and chastity; that is, celibacy, and temperance in every thing. The priests of obedience, who are so called because they obey the grand prior, or commander, and are appointed to officiate in cures belonging to the order, are received without any of the before-mentioned formalities. The badge of the order is, a white cross of eight points, which all the members, after taking their vows, are required to wear, in waxed cloth, on the left side of their cloak or waistcoat. See Pl. 5, fig. 19. By permission of the grand master, the members of the three constituent classes may wear an ornamental golden cross of four branches, enamelled white; and the demi crosses, a similar ornament, but of only three branches. See Pl. 5, fig. 21. This badge is surmounted with an imperial crown, for such knights as belong to Germany; and a regal one for all the rest: it is also decorated between the principal angles with a device, to distinguish the nation of the wearer: an imperial spread eagle, denotes Germany; a fleur-de-lis, France, and of course, Provence and Auvergne; a castle, Castile; a lion, Leon or Arragon. See Pl. 5, fig. 17, 18, and 20; and the distinction of the knights of Italy varies according to the sovereign whose authority they acknowledge.

When they go to war with the Turks, they wear, over all, a red cassock, with a large white cross before and behind, without points. The ordinary habit of the grand master, is a sort of cassock of tabby or cloth, open before, and tied around him with a girdle, from which hangs a purse, intended to denote charity to the poor; over this he ordinarily wears a velvet gown, which, on solemn festivals, is exchanged for a long cloak, decorated on the left side with a white cross of eight points. This country, when included among the nations of the order, formed a grand priory, the head of which was styled, Prior Hospitalis Sancti Johannis Jerusalem in Anglia, and by this title was summoned to parliament, as a baron of the kingdom; and in time came to rank as first baron, and took place accordingly, above all other barons. There is extant the oath of fealty which one of them, John de Raylington, made to Richard I.

Their seminary in this country was suppressed by Henry VIII.; but they continued to appoint one, whom they called grand prior of England.

INTEGRITY, in Germany, instituted in 1690, by Frederick, Duke of Saxe-Gotha.

IRON CROSS, a Prussian order, founded 10th March, 1813, by Frederick-William III. as an honourable distinction for military and civil services during the campaign of that year, for which it was purposely created, and not conferred after the war.

The order consists of grand crosses, (bestowed only on such as have performed some very heroic achievement), and of two other classes, through the inferior of which they must pass to the superior.

By royal ordonnance of the 15th May, 1813, it was directed that the names of the military officers who had fallen in actions, which, had they survived, would have rendered them worthy of the order, should be inserted on tablets, affixed in the church in garrison, and that the state should provide for their widows and orphans.

The badge is a cross pattée of iron, edged with silver, which is worn by the military knights of the second class, suspended from the button-hole, by a black ribbon, edged with white; and by the civil members, from a white ribbon, edged with black. The first class, in addition to this badge, wear a similar cross, placed as a star on the left side of their upper garment; and the grand crosses wear a cross double the size of that of the first class, suspended from a ribbon round the neck. See Pl. 5, fig. 12.

IRON CROWN. This order was instituted 5th June, 1805, by Napoleon, the late Emperor of France, as a mark of honour, to recompense services rendered to the crown, either military or civil, as well as to distinguish persons eminent in arts and literature.

Francis II. Emperor of Austria, on the 12th February, 1816, the anniversary of his birth, decreed that the Iron Crown should, for the future, be considered an order of his kingdom; and the grand mastership inseparable from the crown of Austria; and the nomination of the knights be vested in the grand master.

The order is divided into three classes, distinguished by their rank. The number of the first class is twenty; that of the second, thirty; and the third, fifty. Persons eminent for their attachment to the king or the state, or for services and talent, civil or military, are admitted into the order, without regard to rank.

The second class bear the badge suspended from the neck; and the third, from the button-hole.

The soldiers who were admitted into this order by Napoleon, received only a gold medal.

ISABEL, THE CATHOLIC, ROYAL AMERICAN ORDER OF, instituted 24th March, 1815, by Ferdinand VII. King of Spain, to reward the loyalty and zeal shown in the preservation of his majesty's Indian possessions.

Isabel, Queen of Portugal is patroness; and the King of Spain, sovereign of the order.

The number of its members is not limited. It is divided into three classes; viz. grand crosses (who have the title of Excellency), commanders, and knights; and for admission into this order, it is necessary to be of noble rank; but Indian subjects, worthy of honourable recompense, are admitted into the suite of the order.

The badge is, a cross pattée gold, enamelled gules, the extremities indented, with rays of gold between the principal angles. Upon a circular centre, surrounded with a fillet, inscribed with the motto, Ala lealtad acrisola da, is represented a mount vert, divided by a rivulet of water on the dexter side, two bundles of reeds or fascies, united by a label, inscribed Ultra; and in the sinister a mound, ensigned with a royal crown. The badge is surmounted by a wreath of laurel, from the top of which it is suspended by a ring, from a white ribbon, edged with black. See Pl. 6, fig. 1. The star is formed like the badge; but the centre device is surrounded by a wreath of laurel, surmounted by a ribbon, the upper half bearing the same motto as the badge; and on the lower, Por Isabel la Catolica, tied in a knot at the bottom, and having at the top a small oval medallion, imperially crowned, bearing the royal cypher F.R. See Pl. 5, fig. 8.

The Indians wear, suspended on the breast by a violet-coloured ribbon, a gold medal, on which is a representation of the king.

JAGO SAN, DI COMPOSTELLA, OR ST. JAMES OF THE SWORD, in Spain. Amidst the conflicting accounts given by different authors, as to the origin of this order, it is scarcely possible, with any degree of accuracy, to fix the date of its institution. Some writers ascribe its foundation to Ramiro, King of Leon and Galicia, about the year 837 or 846, after a victory over the Moors at Logrono, which was attributed to the miraculous interposition of St. James, who was seen during the battle, holding in his hand a white banner, on which appeared a red sword in the form of a cross, which induced the King to institute a brotherhood, under the title of the Order of St. James, to reward the services of those who fought with him in this memorable engagement; to whom he granted, as arms, a red sword, on a field of gold, with the motto, Rubet ensis sanguine Arabum; i.e. Red is the sword with the blood of the Arabs; and it is pretended that the Pope, some short time after, made it an order of knighthood; but as armorial ensigns were not in use until the tenth or eleventh century, this fabulous account refutes itself, and the origin of the order is, with more plausibility, fixed at a much later period. The generality of Spanish writers attribute the institution either to Alphonso IX. who reigned in Castile from 1158 to 1214; or to Ferdinand II. who was King of Leon from 1157 to 1188; and it is stated that the incursions and depredations of the Moors, who attacked the pilgrims, and disturbed their devotions, in their way to Compostella, to visit the shrine of St. James, gave rise to the establishment of the order, under the following circumstances.

The canons regular of the order of St. Augustine, established at St. Eligius, possessing a convent in Galicia, which was endowed with considerable revenues, were induced, from motives of piety, to erect two hospitals on the road called the highway to France, which were capable of lodging and protecting their pious visitors. Not long after, thirteen gentlemen, choosing the same apostle for their protector, after the example of the good fathers, made a vow to secure the road, and repel the incursions of the infidels.

These gentlemen made a proposal to the canons regular of St. Eligius to unite their possessions with those of the canons, in the formation of one community.

As these chevaliers were then masters of more than twenty castles, the canons united with them; and, in the course of time, they became subjected to the knights as their chaplains.

This union took place in 1170; and in 1175, the order was confirmed by Pope Alexander III. Don Ferdinand Fuentes Encalada, being the first grand master.

Pope Alexander III. gave rules to the order, for its internal government. He ordained that the dignitary, who in their language is denominated, El Treze, or the Thirteenth, should, henceforth and for ever, be the next in rank immediately after the grand master, enjoying precedence before all commanders.

The second dignity, is that of grand prior, which is especially attached to the barons of St. Eligius.

The third dignity, is that of grand commander. Previous to the grand mastership being unalienably united to the crown of Spain, (which happened in 1523, under the Pontificate Adrian VI.) the knights possessed the privilege of electing their chief, and had the power of degrading or deposing him, if they thought proper.

The Emperor, Charles V. as King of Spain, ordained a council to be formed, which he denominated, the council of the orders, which was the superior general, not only of that of St. James, but likewise of those of Calatrava, Alcantara, and Montesa.

This council consisted of a president and eight knights, two of each order; and, in all matters relative to the ecclesiastical or secular jurisdiction, or with respect to the ecclesiastical alone, it possessed just the same power over these orders, as the king himself did as administrator.

The authority of this tribunal extended over two cities, two hundred and twenty burghs, and twenty-five villages; and of these, two cities, and one hundred and twenty-eight, as well burghs as villages, were the peculiar property of the order of St. James. It was the richest and most powerful of the four, possessing eighty-four commanderies, amongst which were the grand commanderies of Castile, Leon, and Montaluan, in the kingdom of Arragon. These eighty-four commanderies enjoyed a revenue amounting to the sum of 230,000 ducats; and the right of patronage extended over two hundred priories, factories, and benefices of inferior value. The order was divided into four provinces; viz. Castile, Leon, Old Castile, and Arragon.

The knights take the vow of poverty, obedience, and conjugal chastity; to which they add a fourth:—to defend and maintain the immaculate conception of the holy mother of Jesus Christ.

For admission as a knight, it is necessary to exhibit proof of four descents of uninterrupted and uncontaminated nobility, as well on the father's as on the mother's side. The latter was not required formerly; but since 1658, it was ordained by general chapter that such proof should be made on both sides.

Novices are obliged to serve on board the galleys for the space of six months; and during one month must reside in a convent, to learn the rules of the order.

Not many years ago, the number of knights amounted to about six hundred. They have the privilege of seating themselves, and remaining covered, in the presence of the king.

Upon the death of a knight, the commander of the nearest commandery is obliged to nourish and maintain a pauper during the term of forty days, in addition to the performance of the usual service of requiem observed on such occasions.

The badge of the order is, a red enamelled cross of gold, in the form of a sword, the pommel shaped somewhat like a heart reversed, the extremities of the guard terminating as a fleur-de-lis; and upon the centre, an escallop argent. See Pl. 5, fig. 13. It is suspended on the breast from a rich plain red ribbon, worn round the neck; but on ceremonial days, from a triple gold chain.

The robe of ceremony is a long white mantle, with a cross embroidered on the left shoulder; the rest of the dress is of black silk or velvet, made in the old Spanish fashion; the hat is of black velvet, adorned with a plume of white ostrich's feathers, in the midst of which is one small red feather.

This order is likewise conferred on ladies of quality; but they have not, like the knights, permission to marry. Their habit is black, and the badge the same as the knights.

JESUS AND MARY, in Italy, an order instituted in 1615, by Pope Paul V. The knights were sworn to defend the holy see of Rome against infidels and heretics; for which purpose, each knight was obliged constantly to keep ready a horse completely accoutred, a sword, a lance, and a servant armed with a fusée. The badge was a Maltese cross of eight points, enamelled red, edged with gold; across the centre, the letters I. H. S. and over the middle letter, the Greek character Ω, the symbol of the Virgin Mary. See Pl. 6, fig. 2.

JESUS CHRIST AND ST. PETER, in Spain. This order is said to have been instituted in 1216, by St. Dominick, at the time of the crusade against the Albigenses, and approved by the pope in the same year. The knights engaged to war against the heretics.

Popes Urban IV. Clement IV. Gregory IX. Adrian IV. Clement VII. Pius V. and Paul V. granted many privileges to this order. Pius V. instituted in Rome, the congregation of St. Peter the Martyr, composed of cardinals, inquisitors-general, and officers of the holy office; since which time, the knights of this order, and the members of the congregation of St. Peter, have formed one body.

King Ferdinand VII. on 17th May, 1815, ordained that the ministers of the holy office should be distinguished and honoured by always wearing the insignia of this order, which is, a cross flory, per cross and saltier argent and sable, the sides of the fleurs-de-lis much hooked; upon a circular centre, also argent, a cross Calvary erect; and on the dexter base, a sword bend-ways. The badge is surmounted by the royal crown, and suspended by a ring of gold from a red ribbon at the button-hole by the knights, and a black ribbon by the ecclesiastics. See Pl. 6, fig. 6.

KNOT, in Naples, instituted in 1352, on the marriage of the Queen of Naples with Prince Lewis of Torontum, and in memory of his coronation as King of Jerusalem and Naples, on Whitsunday in that year. It was at first denominated L' Order du St. Esprit au droit desir; and afterwards more commonly called Z' Order du Nœud, or of the Knot, from the knights wearing for a badge a knot like that termed a true lover's knot, embroidered on the right arm or breast of their coats, in purple silk, intermixed with gold, bearing the motto, Le Dieu plait. See Pl. 6, fig. 3.

It was at first composed of sixty knights, which number was afterwards increased to three hundred; but the order became extinct amidst the revolutions which happened after the death of the founder.

LADIES SLAVES TO VIRTUE. An Austrian order, instituted in 1662, by Eleanora Di Gonzaga, widow of the Emperor Ferdinand III. for thirty ladies of noble families; to promote piety and religion in her court. The empress was sovereign of the order.

The badge was a golden sun in splendour, within a chaplet of laurel, enamelled, vert; and over it the motto, Sola ubique triumphat. It was worn pendent at the breast, either to a small chain of gold, or a plain narrow black ribbon. See Pl. 6, fig. 5.

LADIES, ORDER OF THE SCARF. Instituted by John I. King of Castile, in 1390, in memory of the inhabitants of Placentia having forced the English to raise the siege of that town. The order was united to that of the band, the ladies wearing a scarf of gold over their habit.

LAKE, OR OF THE ENTERPRISE. An order instituted in 1351, by Louis, King of Hungary, and titular King of Jerusalem, when he undertook the expedition against Greece.

LAMB OF GOD. This order was instituted at Upsal, by John the Great, King of Sweden, on his coronation in 1564; but was soon discontinued.

The collar of the order is said to have been composed of wreaths of laurel, surmounted by royal crowns, supported by lions and lizards, and intermixed with columns with cherubim.

The badge affixed to the collar was a medal, upon which was represented the Saviour of the world, supported by two angels kneeling, inscribed with the motto, Deus protector noster; and pendent to the medal was a paschal lamb, in enamel; but as no exact representation of the collar and badge is extant, a correct plate cannot be given.

LEGION OF HONOUR. Instituted by Napoleon, Emperor of France, 19th May, 1802, to recompense civil and military services. It was approved and confirmed by Louis XVIII. July 6, 1814; who, by royal ordonnance, March 26, 1816, regulated its present institution.

The king is sovereign and grand master; and the administration of it is intrusted to a grand chancellor.

The legion is composed of twenty-four grand crosses; one hundred and sixty grand officers; four hundred commanders; and two thousand officers; besides an unlimited number of knights, into which class persons must first obtain admission, before they can be received in the higher ranks. The princes of the royal family, and foreigners, are not included in the numbers above stated; and no person is admitted into the legion under twenty-five years service, either in civil or military capacities, unless he has rendered some distinguished service to the king or state, or received severe wounds. Persons distinguished in sciences or arts are likewise admitted into this order.

The following is the oath taken by each knight upon admission. "I swear to be faithful to the king, to honour, and my country; immediately to reveal whatever may come to my knowledge, that may be prejudicial to the service of his majesty and the good of the state; not to undertake any foreign service without express consent of the king; to observe the laws, ordonnances, and regulations; and, in general, to do all which is the duty of a brave and loyal knight of the Legion of Honour."

The feast of the order is observed 15 July, being St. Henry's day.

The badge of the knights is, a silver cross of ten points, enamelled white, surmounting a chaplet formed of a branch of laurel, and another of oak, proper; upon a circular centre are the arms of France, surrounded by a fillet azure, upon which is inscribed the motto, Honneur et patrie. On the centre of the reverse is a sword pale; and upon the fillet, Pro virtute bellica. Each point of the cross is adorned with a small silver ball, and upon the top is an imperial crown, by which it is suspended from a ring, all of silver, to a broad red ribbon, at the button-hole. See Pl. 6, fig. 9.

A similar badge, but of gold instead of silver, the centre having the head of Henry IV. in gold, and upon the fillet Henry IV. Roi de Franc. et de Nav; and on the middle of the reverse, a sword in pale, surmounting a chaplet of laurel and oak, with the motto, Bellicæ virtuti præmium, inscribed upon the fillet, as in Pl. 6, fig. 6. is worn by the superior classes; viz. by the officers, from the button-hole with a rosette; by the commanders and grand officers, round the neck; and by the grand crosses, scarfways from right to left.

The grand officers and grand crosses likewise wear a silver star, formed of a ten-pointed cross, like the badge, with fleurs-de-lis between the principal angles; having on a circular centre, the head of Henry IV. surrounded with a fillet, inscribed Honneur et patrie, also depicted in Pl. 5, fig. 15. The grand crosses wear such star upon the left, and the grand officers upon the right side of their upper garments.

LEOPOLD, of Austria. An order founded by the Emperor Francis, 7 January, 1808, the day of his nuptials with the Archduchess Louisa. It was instituted in honour of the memory of the Emperor Leopold, as a reward of merit for services in the state; an eminence in arts or sciences; and other national improvements. It is obtained without distinction of rank, and both civil and military persons are admitted into it.

Although the statutes of this order bear date 14 July, 1808, the complete establishment of it, and the first admission of knights, did not take place until the 6th of January following.

The Emperor of Austria is grand master, who nominates at his pleasure, and the honour of admission is never solicited.

The members are divided into three classes; viz. grand crosses, commanders, and knights.

The grand crosses and commanders have admission at court at all times; but the knights only upon particular festivals.

The commanders receive the title of baron, and the knights are admitted amongst the noblesse of the kingdom. The grand crosses are styled, by the Emperor, cousins.

The feast of the order is celebrated on the first Sunday after the Epiphany, at which all the knights in Vienna must assist.

The officers are, a prelate, a chancellor, a treasurer, a greffier, a herald, and a register.

The badge of the order is, a cross pattée gold, the extremities somewhat concaved, enamelled gules, with a white bordure; upon a circular centre, red, is the cypher F. A. 7, surrounded with a chaplet of laurel; the reverse of the centre being inscribed Opus Reg. Cord. subdit. See Pl. 6, fig. 4. This badge is suspended by a ring from a crown of gold, placed on the end of a broad red ribbon edged with blue, and is worn scarfways by the grand crosses from right to left; by the commanders, round the neck; and by the knights, from the button-hole on the left side.

The grand crosses likewise wear, on the left side, a silver star of eight points, those in saltier being straight, the others, wavy. Upon the centre is embroidered the cross or badge of the order, but with three leaves or ornaments in gold, between each of the principal angles. See Pl. 6, fig. 7.

LILY OF ARRAGON, OR DE LA JARA, instituted in 1410, by Ferdinand of Castile, Duke of Pognafiel, brother of Henry III. King of Castile, in commemoration of a victory obtained over the Moors, and the taking of a strong city and castle of Antequiera, or Antequora, which for several ages had been considered impregnable, and in which place Don Ferdinand held the first chapter of the order.

The collar of this order was composed of pots and lilies and griffins intermixed, to which was pendent a medal, upon which was represented the image of the Virgin and Child, enamelled in proper colours. See Pl. 6, fig. 10.

The order was removed from Castile to Arragon, where it continued to flourish for a considerable time, under the descendants of the founder.

LILY, in Italy, instituted in 1546, by Pope Paul III. and was confirmed in 1556, by Paul IV. who placed it above all the other Italian orders. The badge is, an oval medal of gold, upon which was enamelled a lily, azure.

LILY OF NAVARRE, OR OUR LADY OF THE LILY. An order instituted in the city of Nagera, by Garcias VI. King of Navarre, son and successor of Sanchez the Great, about the year 1043, in consequence of the superstitious belief that he had been miraculously delivered from distemper, by an image of the Virgin Mary issuing out of a lily, said to have been discovered in that city.

This order was composed of thirty-eight knights of the most illustrious and ancient families of Navarre, Biscay, and Old Castile. The badge of the order was a lily, embroidered in silver, upon the breast.

The collar was composed of a double chain of gold, interlaced with a Gothic capital letter; and pendent thereto was an oval medal, with a lily of gold springing from a mount, supporting on the top of the letter, ducally crowned, enamelled upon a white ground. See Pl. 6, fig. 13.

LION FOR CIVIL MERIT. This order was instituted in September, 1815, by William-Frederick, the first king of the Netherlands, to recompence persons in the civil service of the state; and in order to bestow it where due, it was divided into four classes; viz. grand crosses, commanders, knights, and brothers, the latter of whom have an annual provision of five hundred francs, one-half of which is continued to their widows.

The grand crosses and commanders wear the following badge suspended from a broad blue watered ribbon, with a narrow orange stripe at each edge, the former scarfways over the right shoulder, and the latter round the neck; viz. a golden cross of eight points, enamelled white, with small balls at each extremity, and between the principal angles four knots, formed somewhat like a W, in gold; upon a circular centre azure, a lion rampant or, with a crown above the head; on the reverse of the centre, Virtus nobilitat; upon the top of the cross, an imperial crown, by which it is suspended from a ring attached to the ribbon. See Pl. 6, fig. 22.

The knights and brothers wear a similar badge, the former in gold, the latter in silver, suspended from the button-hole.

The grand crosses likewise wear, on the left breast, a silver star of eight points or rays, upon which is embroidered a cross of as many points, edged with gold; upon the middle, encircled with a blue fillet, are the words, Virtus nobilitat, inscribed upon an azure ground. See Pl. 6, fig. 8.

The commanders also wear a kind of star, composed of the cross without the rays, and ensigæed with an imperial crown. See Pl. 6, fig. 21.

LION OF FRANCE, an order instituted in 1080, by Enguerrand de Coucy, who, having killed a lion which had made great ravages in a forest, instituted this order in memory of the action. The badge was a golden medal, upon which was a lion rampant, with a crown above the head; it was worn suspended from the neck.

LION OF LEMBOURG, OR OF MERIT, AND ORDER OF THE FOUR EMPERORS, OR ANCIENT NOBLESSE. These orders were founded in 1768, in honour of the memory of the four Emperors of the House of Lembourg-Luxembourg, Henry VII. Charles IV. Wincellaus, and Sigismond.

The order of the four Emperors, or of Ancient Noblesse, created for the support and preservation of nobility in general, is composed of grand crosses, commanders, and knights.

The grand master must be some sovereign prince of the empire; and for admission into this order, it is requisite, according to the statutes, to produce proof of nobility; but this is very little attended to.

The order of the Lion of Lembourg, or of Merit, dedicated to St. Philip, was instituted to reward science, talents, and virtue, in all classes of society. It is divided like that of the Four Emperors.

After the death of their founder, these orders remained many years without a chief; but since 1818, a younger Prince of the House of Saxony has been named grand master.

The badge of the order of the Four Emperors, or Ancient Noblesse, is, a golden cross of eight points, enamelled white, with rays of gold between the four principal angles, and the letters H. C. W. S. disposed one upon each limb; upon an oval centre azure, edged with gold, the figure of an angel conducting a child, also gold; the cross ensigued with a crown, from the top of which it is suspended by a ring, from a sky blue coloured watered ribbon, edged with yellow; and on the limbs of the reverse of the cross, are four letters, P. D. E. P. and the words, Illustri. et Nobi. upon the blue oval centre. See Pl. 6, fig. 18. This badge is worn by the grand crosses scarfways from right to left; by the commanders, suspended from the neck; and by the knights, from the button-hole.

The grand crosses and commanders wear on the left breast, a silver star, formed of a cross of eight points, edged with gold, and having balls upon the extremities, of gold, with golden flames between each of the principal angles, and the letters H. C. W. S. disposed singly upon the limbs; upon a circular centre azure, the figure of an angel leading a child or, upon a mount vert, surrounded with a blue fillet inscribed, Illustribus et Nobilitati; the motto, edge of fillet, and surrounding letters, of gold. See Pl. 6, fig. 12.

The members of the order of the Lion bear the badge following, in the same manner as that worn by those of the order of Ancient Noblesse; viz. a golden cross of eight points, enamelled white, with chaplets of laurel vert, between the principal angles, and the letters H. C. W. S. disposed singly upon the limbs: on a circular centre, azure, surrounded with a blue fillet, bearing the motto, Bene Merentibus, the figure of St. Philip, enamelled proper. Reverse, the letters P. D. E. P. upon the limbs of the cross, the centre charged with a lion rampant gules, the fillet surrounding it, bearing the inscription, Virtuti Beneficentia, in letters of gold. This badge suspended by a ring from a red watered ribbon, edged with yellow. See Pl. 6, fig. 18.

LION OF THE PALATINATE, an order instituted by the Elector Palatine, Charles Theodore, 1 January, 1768, being the twenty-fifth anniversary of his reign; upon which account the knights were limited to that number, including the chancellor; and for admission into this order, it was necessary to have served the electoral house twenty-five years.

The badge was an eight-pointed cross of gold, enamelled blue, with flames of gold issuant between the principal angles; upon the centre, a lion rampant surrounded with a fillet argent, upon the upper part of which is the word Merenti; the cross suspended from the crown, attached by a ring to a white watered ribbon, with a broad bordure of dark blue. See Pl. 6, fig. 17. It is suspended scarfways, but the ecclesiastics of the order wear it round the neck.

The star is a silver cross of eight points, the centre of each limb chequered, bearing the word Lux-tu-tor, thus divided; and in the middle the cypher T. C. ensigued with the crown; between each of the principal angles of the cross, five wavy rays of gold. See Pl. 6, fig. 11.

King Maximilian Joseph, in 1808, declared the order extinct; and no more knights have since been made, nor has the decoration been worn but by very few persons.

LION, of Zähringen, was instituted 26 December, 1812, by Louis Frederic, Duke of Baden, in honour of his marriage with Stephania-Louisa-Adriana; in memory of the House of the ancient Dukes of Zähringen.

It is divided into three classes; viz. grand crosses, commanders, and knights. The badge is, a golden cross pattée, enamelled vert, the principal angles being filled up with an ornament of gold, upon a circular centre gules, edged with the same metal, a lion rampant or; and upon the reverse, a landscape, with a tower and castle. See Pl. 6, fig. 19. It is suspended from a green watered ribbon, edged with orange, and worn by the grand crosses scarfways from right to left; by the commanders, round the neck; and by the knights, from the button-hole.

The grand crosses likewise wear, on the left side of their habit, a silver star of eight rays; upon the centre of which is a lion rampant or, upon a field gules, encircled with a fillet bearing the inscription, Fur. Ehre. Und. Wahrheit. See Pl. 6, fig. 16.

LIONESSE, or REEL. It is said that this order was instituted under the following circumstances. Ladislaus, son of Charles Duras, having been proclaimed and crowned King of Naples, at Gaeta, the Neapolitans set up Lewis II. Duke of Anjou, which laid the foundation for the sanguinary wars that followed that event, in 1386 and 1390. These troubles divided the Neapolitan nobles into two factions: those who declared for the House of Anjou, wore, on the left arm, a golden reel, embroidered on a red ground, out of contempt to Queen Margaret, widow of Charles III. who wanted to hold the government during the minority of Ladislaus, calling themselves Knights of the Reel; whilst others wore on the breast, pendent to a ribbon round the neck, the figure of a lioness, with her feet tied, indicating that the queen was thus shackled, and styled themselves Knights of the Lioness.

LOUIS, of Hesse Darmstadt, an order instituted by the reigning grand duke, in 1807; the first nomination of knights having taken place 25th August, in that year, being the feast-day of St. Louis. It was founded to reward civil and military merit in all ranks; and is divided into five classes, viz. grand crosses, commanders of the first and of the second rank, and knights divided in the same manner.

The grand cross is given only to princes, or public functionaries of the highest rank; the second, to general officers or privy counsellors; the third, to superior officers; the fourth, to subaltern officers; and the fifth, to under officers, soldiers, persons in civil departments, citizens, and yeomen. Promotion sometimes takes place from the lower to the higher classes of the order.

The badge is an eight-pointed cross of gold, enamelled black, with a red border; upon a circular centre gules, the letter L, between two laurel-branches, encircled with a fillet of silver, edged with gold, inscribed Fur verdienste; the middle of the reverse is purpure, with the inscription, Gott · chrs · vater · land; and on the fillet two laurel-branches vert. The cross is suspended from a crown, attached by a ring to a broad black ribbon, bordered with red. See Pl. 7, fig. 1.

The badge is the same for all classes, differing only in the embellishments. The first class wear it scarfways, from left to right; the second and third classes suspend it from the neck; the fourth, from the button-hole; and the fifth bear it in the same manner, but made of silver.

The grand crosses and first class of commanders also wear, on the left side of their habit, an embroidered silver star of eight points of rays, with a circular centre, and the words, Gott · ehre · vater · land, upon a purple ground, surrounded with a silver fillet, edged with gold, upon which is a branch of laurel, and one of oak. See Pl. 6, fig. 16.

LOUISA, of Prussia, established for ladies, by Frederick-William III. as a mark of honour for such as were distinguished for their patriotism and humanity during the wars. It was bestowed upon one hundred ladies, single or married, without regard to birth or rank.

The badge is a golden cross, enamelled black, upon a centre of which is a circular medallion of celestial blue, bearing on one side a starry crown; and upon the other, the dates 1813 and 1814. It is suspended by a white ribbon, edged with black, and attached to the left side.

MALTA, LADIES, KNIGHTS OF, an order instituted in 1107, by Agnes, Abbess of the Hospital of St. Mary Magdalen. She, with her companions, made profession of the same rule, took the same habit, and bound themselves to observe the same vows as Gerard de Dedier had done, in 1089. The badge of this order was the same as that of the knights of Malta. The ladies, according to ancient custom, were styled sisters hospitalers; and afterwards denominated dames. There are likewise dames grand crosses. See KNIGHTS HOSPITALERS OF ST. JOHN OF JERUSALEM.

MARIA-ELEONORA, a Swedish order for ladies, instituted by Maria-Eleonora, Queen of Sweden, upon the death of her husband, Gustavus-Adolphus, who was killed at Lutzen, in Saxony, 16th November, 1632. It appears that this order was conferred only upon princesses of the blood royal. The badge was a heart crowned; and the motto, Post mortem triumpho, et morte vici multis despectus magna feci.

MARIA-LOUISA, an order for ladies, instituted 19 March, 1792, by Charles IV. King of Spain. The ladies who compose this order, are nominated by the queen, and they must, at least, once a month, visit some hospital for females. The badge is a cross pattée, enamelled white, edged with lilac; between the principal angles, a castle and a lion, placed alternately, and united by chains of gold; upon an oval centre, surrounded with a lilac fillet, a figure in enamel, representing the image of St. Ferdinand; on the reverse, the cypher of Maria-Louisa; and upon the top of the cross, a wreath of laurel gold. See Pl. 7, fig. 2. It is worn scarfways, suspended from a ring by a rich white watered ribbon, with a broad border or lilac.

MARIA-THERESA, an order of Austria, instituted in June, 1757, by the empress. At first, it consisted of only two classes, viz. grand crosses and knights; but in 1765, the Emperor Joseph II. added an intermediate class, styled commanders.

The order is not limited as to number, and is conferred upon officers of the imperial army, from the highest to the lowest rank, for the honourable discharge of their duty, and signal acts of valour and distinguished bravery.

To be received into the order, three essential points are requisite: first, the brave action that entitles the candidate thereto, must be properly described; secondly, the description confirmed by competent proof; and thirdly, the chapter must constitute an impartial inquiry whether such proofs are in anywise defective, and whether the action described is of a nature to merit the grand or the smaller cross. The election is as follows:

Firstly, Every one of the grand crosses, &c. present, beginning with the junior, and advancing to the senior, shall deliver his opinion respecting the merits alleged in the memorials, as well as on the validity of the certificates to be entered on the minutes.

Secondly, The president of the chapter shall then collect the suffrages, decree according to the opinion of the majority, and transmit to us, (the sovereign or grand master) the sentiments of the chapter, together with the original memorials, certificates, and minutes, in which the vote of each shall be particularized, in order that we, as grand master, may found our resolution thereupon, and either confirm or reject the proposition of the chapter, or issue further orders in respect thereof; we reserving to ourselves, as grand master, the ultimate decision, to which the decree in chapter is only preparatory, and by no means conclusive.

Thirdly, But, as we shall always entrust the commission of presiding at the chapter to one of the grand crosses present with the army, according to our pleasure, we deem it, at the same time, necessary, in order that the said chapter of the order may never be rendered inactive, to provide such grand crosses with a power of substitution, in case of indisposition, which substitution, however, must always be granted in writing, and to none other than to a grand cross, preferring the senior, if he be not absent, or prevented from attendance.

Fourthly, When the confirmation of the decree in chapter shall have been issued by us, as grand master, and the advancement of the candidates for the order signified upon a list under our signature, it is our gracious will that our favour, as grand master, be assured to such candidates, in the most solemn manner. In pursuance whereof, he who may have received from us the authority to preside at the chapter, or whosoever he may substitute and empower for that purpose, shall notify, in a particular missive to the candidates, their approaching promotion to knighthood, observing at the same time the day and hour when this solemn transaction is to take place.

Fifthly, On the day preceding the ceremony, notice shall be publicly given upon guard, that we deemed the generals and officers, whose names will then be mentioned, on account of their prudent and gallant conduct, worthy of being received into the order, either as grand crosses or as knights; and that, in pursuance of our gracious command, the promotion is to take place at the appointed time, on the following day, at head-quarters; for which purpose, the other generals, and the staff, and other officers, are to attend there, in order to assist at the solemn reception of the candidates into the order.

Sixthly, On the following day, the grand crosses, duly authorized, shall make known to the assembly, in a short speech, our decree, as grand master, in respect to the particular merits of the candidates; and at the conclusion, shall decorate the grand crosses with the ensign of the order, scarfways, and the other knights, by appending the same to a button-hole of the coat or the waistcoat, amidst the sound of trumpets and kettle-drums; and read the following admonition. "Receive, by the most high command of the emperor, grand master, from my hands, the ensign of the military order of Maria Theresa. This shall serve as an evidence of your achievements, and your reception into this order, dedicated solely to prudence and valour. Avail yourself of it, to the honour of God, to the service of the most illustrious Arch-House, and the defence of our country."

Whereupon the candidates shall congratulate and embrace each other; and the same ceremony will then also be observed among themselves, by the grand crosses and knights.

Ceremonial observed at the Installation, in the Imperial and Royal Palace of Vienna, on the 7th March, 1758.

His majesty, the Emperor, as grand master, having graciously resolved, in person, to confer this order upon the two first grand crosses, viz. his royal highness the most serene Charles, Duke of Lorraine, Governor General of the Austrian Netherlands, and his excellency Field-Marshal Comte Leopold de Daun, the chancellor of the order, notified, in a separate letter to each candidate, his nomination, by command of his majesty, appointing, at the same time, the day and hour their solemn installation should take place.

Due notice was thereupon given to all the generals and staff officers present, to appear, on the appointed day and hour, at court, in the respective uniforms of their rank, in order to assist at the said solemn ceremony of knighthood. The door-keepers of the chamber were commanded to admit all superior military officers, and all those persons who have entrance into the drawing room, into the second anti-chamber, where the solemnity was to take place.

At the time appointed, his majesty the emperor, as grand master, habited in uniform, and preceded by the officers of the order, chamberlains, privy councillors, and high officers of the court, (to whom the proper notification had been made for their appearance at the appointed hour, in their military dress) and more immediately, by the grand marshal of the court, bearing the sword of state, erect and unsheathed, and attended, as usual, by the captains of the guards and the great chamberlain, repaired to the second anti-chamber, where the generals, staff, and other military officers, were assembled, and where this solemn act was to be performed; and, his head being covered, ascended the throne, which had been erected upon a haut-pas, or broad step, under a canopy, and was of three degrees, in the same form as at investiture of fiefs of the empire; the officers of state, the chancellor of the order, the generals, and staff officers, as also the officers of the order, retiring to their respective places.

The imperial great chamberlain was then sent to bring in the candidates, who had till then remained in the arch-ducal Josephine anti-chamber; and having conducted them to the haut-pas, or broad step of the throne, in the second anti-chamber, (which haut-pas was then ascended by his royal highness the most illustrious Duke Charles, of Lorraine,) they took their stations; and, standing there, they attended to the speech of the chancellor of the order, and remained so during the ceremony of receiving Field-Marshal Comte Leopold de Daun into the order; the said Field-Marshal de Daun continuing to stand in his place, below the haut-pas, and opposite to his imperial majesty, until the chancellor called him to be invested with the ensign of the order.

On the right side of the imperial throne, and below the haut-pas, there was placed against the wall a table covered with red velvet, embroidered with gold; and thereon the two patents and ensigns of the order: near the said table stood the treasurer and register of the order.

As soon as the candidates were arrived at their above mentioned stations, and the great chamberlain had retired to his place, the chancellor of the order approached the throne, and having knelt on the highest step to receive the imperial commands, he thereupon retired, and remained at his place at the haut-pas. He then addressed a short speech to the assembly, and particularly to the two candidates for the order; in which he dwelt chiefly upon the institution and general object of the order, as well as upon the merits of the candidates, who had been nominated thereto.

Whereupon the first candidate for the order, namely, his royal highness the most illustrious Duke Charles, of Lorraine, being, by a given sign of the chancellor, called to the throne, knelt with both knees upon a cushion of red velvet, embroidered with gold, which had been previously placed by the great usher of the chamber, on the highest step of the throne, at the feet of his imperial majesty.

The chancellor then received the ensigns of the order from the hands of the treasurer, and delivered the same to his majesty, the grand master, who invested the above mentioned most illustrious candidate therewith, pronouncing the following words: "Receive from our hands the ensign of the military order of Maria Theresa. This shall bear witness of your achievements, and constitute you a member of this order, dedicated solely to prudence and valour. Avail yourself of it to the honour of God, the service of our house, and the defence of the country."

His majesty thereupon embraced the most illustrious duke, he still kneeling; and the latter retiring to his former station upon the haut-pas, the cushion upon which his royal highness had knelt, was removed by the great usher of the chamber.

The installation of the second grand cross having been performed in like manner, and the solemnity ended, his imperial majesty descended from the throne, and retired to the closet in the order as before.

Directions relative to the solemn observance of the annual feast of the Military Order of Maria Theresa, at Vienna.

1. The grand crosses and knights residing there, are to be formally invited, by the proper persons, to the feast of this order.

2. On the day of the feast, all the knights, as well as the grand crosses, shall have admittance into the council chamber, whence they will have the honour of accompanying his imperial majesty, the most illustrious grand master, to the chapel or church of the court.

ii. The procession to the chapel of the court shall be in the following order:

First, Pages of honour.

Second, The chamberlains and privy-counsellors, in their regimentals.

Third, The knights and grand crosses, according to seniority, wearing the ensign of the order attached to their respective ribbons, habited also in the generals' uniform, or their regimentals.

Fourth, The most illustrious grand master of this order, likewise in rich uniform, wearing, besides the Golden Fleece pendent from a red ribbon, the great ribbon of the order. The two senior grand crosses present will accompany his imperial majesty, their most gracious grand master; and then follow the great chamberlain, and the captains of the guard of halberdiers and his-guard, in the same manner as they usually attend his imperial majesty to chapel.

Fifth, The ambassadors immediately follow the person of his imperial majesty, who thus proceeds to the chapel or church of the court.

4. The choir of the chapel or church of the court shall be hung with red damask, as on Christmas and Twelfth-day; and the anthem shall be prepared for his majesty the emperor.

5. The rest of the preparation in the chapel or church shall be made as usual, with this difference only, that a long bench shall be placed for the grand crosses, and several benches crossways for the knights, as is usually done in the church of St. Stephen, when the military attend the feast of thanksgiving, and Te Deum laudamus.

6. After the sermon and high mass, the procession returns in the same order as it came.

The badge is a cross pattée of gold, enamelled white: upon a circular centre, the arms of Austria: viz. gules, a fesse argent, which is surrounded with a fillet inscribed a Fortitudine. It is pendent to a scarlet ribbon with a broad white stripe down the middle, and it wears scarlet ways from right to left, by the grand crosses; by the commanders, from the neck; and by the knights, from the button-hole upon the left side: the size of the badge differing according to the class. See Pl. 7, fig. 3. The grand crosses likewise wear upon the left side, a silver star, formed like the badge, surmounting a circular wreath of crown of laurel: it was assigned to them by Joseph II. in 1788. See Pl. 7, fig. 7.

avow in his whole conduct, chiefly to regard the honour of God, the service of his prince, the interest of mankind, and the good of his country. These statutes he presented in the year 1614, to the regents and states of the kingdom, then assembled at Paris; and he had the satisfaction to see them approved, and to receive the king's commands to devise the ensign and badge of the order; but the turbulence of the times prevented its formal establishment. The humane projector, having lost all hope of seeing his favourite plan succeed, gave all his fortune to his friends, and retired from the world to a hermitage built in a pleasant situation, in that part of the forest of Fontainebleau, which is next to Gatinois, where his remains are still talked of by the country people, by the name of Le Hermité pacifique de la Madalene—The peaceable Hermit of St. Mary Magdalen. The badge of the order was to have been, a cross fleury, the foot resting upon a crescent, in each of the principal angles a fleur-de-lis, and from the extremities eight palm-branches issuant, uniting at the tops, denoting the pilgrimage of the projector; on the centre of the cross an oval, upon which was represented the figure of St. Mary Magdalen, in devotion before a cross. See Pl. 7, fig. 8.

The collar was to have been composed of the letters, M-A-R-Y, united and linked alternately by double hearts interlaced with darts of gold, the shafts of each forming a cross pattée, the cyphers enamelled in white, carnation, and blue. The motto, L'Amour de Dieu est pacifique.

MERIT, CIVIL, of Saxony. An order instituted by Frederick-Augustus, upon re-entering his dominions, 7th June, 1816, after an absence of eighteen months, and intended as a reward for public services. The king is grand master, who nominates the knights, who are not confined as to rank.

The order is divided into grand crosses, commanders, and knights, besides which there is a fourth class, who are decorated with the royal civil medal; and the affairs of the order are conducted by a special council.

The badge is, an eight-pointed cross of gold, enamelled white, with ducal coronets vert, between the principal angles; and upon a circular centre argent, surrounded with a civil wreath, are the words, Für verdienst und treue. See Pl. 7, fig. 4. It is suspended by a ring from a broad blue-coloured watered ribbon, and worn by the grand crosses scarfways; by the commanders, round the neck; and by the knights, from the button-hole.

The grand crosses likewise wear, on the left side of their habit, a star of eight points, embroidered in silver, the centre being similar to the badge. See Pl. 7, fig. 14. MERIT, CIVIL, of Wirtemberg, instituted 8th Nov. 1806, by Frederick I. to recompense, in a distinguished manner, persons employed in the civil service of the kingdom, as well as other subjects meriting reward. The king is grand master, and nominates the members, who are composed of grand crosses, commanders, and knights.

In the month of November, annually, a list of candidates for this order is submitted to the king; and twenty-five years' service as counsellor to his majesty, constitutes a claim.

The badge is, a gold cross of eight points, enamelled white; upon the centre is the letter F, ensigned with the crown, surrounded with a red fillet, inscribed with the words, Furchtlos und treu: on the centre of the reverse, an imperial crown, the fillet inscribed with the same motto. See Pl. 7, fig. 5. It is suspended by a ring from a black watered ribbon edged with yellow, and worn scarfways by the grand crosses; around the neck, by the commanders; and from the button-hole, by the knights.

The grand crosses likewise wear, on the left side of their habit, a silver star of eight points; upon the centre of which is a representation of the badge, surrounded with a red fillet and motto. See Pl. 7, fig. 15.

MERIT, MILITARY, of Baden. An order instituted 4th April, 1807, by the Grand Duke Charles-Frederick. It is composed of three classes; grand crosses, commanders, and knights. The sovereign is grand master, and the princes of the royal family are members from birth. The grand crosses must be of the rank of general, but the other classes are not restricted as to rank; and difference of religion forms no exemption.

The number of members is unlimited; and claims to admission for heroic or extraordinary services, must be verified by testimonials, and submitted to a chapter of the order. Twenty-five years' faithful services, and inviolable attachment to the sovereign, are considered titles for admission; and a chapter assembles annually, under the grand master or senior grand cross, as president; but in all cases, the nomination is approved by the sovereign, who can make promotions without assembling the chapter; and all members of this order receive annual pensions. The officers are, a chancellor, secretary, and treasurer.

The badge is, an eight-pointed cross of gold, enamelled white, surmounting a chaplet of laurel, and ensigned with an imperial crown; upon a circular centre or, on a mount, is a griffin, segreant to the sinister, regardant, wings endorsed, holding in the sinister claw a shield or, charged with a bend gules, (the arms of Baden); and in the dexter, a sword erect, proper; around this device is a fillet azure, inscribed Fur Badens Ehre; the centre of the reverse having the letters C. F. in a cypher. See Pl. 7, fig. 6. The badge is suspended from the mound on the top of the crown, by a ring attached to a crimson ribbon edged with orange colour. It is alike for all classes of the order, with the exception of being more costly according to the degree. The grand crosses wear it scarfways; the commanders, round the neck; and the knights, from the button-hole.

The grand crosses and commanders of the rank of general, likewise wear, on the left side, a silver embroidered star, formed of an eight-pointed cross, with rays between the principal angles, and the centre and fillet like the badge. See Pl. 8, fig. 7.

MERIT, MILITARY, of France. A protestant order, instituted in 1759, by Louis XV. to reward protestant officers of foreign regiments, in the service of France; the order of St Louis, founded by his predecessor, Louis XIV. excluding, by the statutes, all protestants.

Protestants in French regiments, and Roman Catholics in foreign ones, were excluded this order; but in all other points, the statutes are similar to that of St. Louis.

By royal ordinance of the 25th of November, 1814, officers of the navy, as well as the army, are admitted into this order. It is divided into three classes; the number of grand crosses being limited to four, and the commanders to eight; but the number of knights is indefinite.

The badge is, an eight-pointed cross, with balls on the points, and fleurs-de-lis between the principal angles, all of gold; the limbs bordered with white enamel: upon the centre is a laurel crown proper, encircled with a fillet azure, inscribed Ludovicus XV. instituit 1759; on the centre of the reverse is a sword, in pale, or, and on the blue fillet, Pro Virtute Bellica. See Pl. 7, fig. 9. The badge was at first suspended by a ring from a blue ribbon; but since 1814, it has been changed to red, the same as that of the order of St. Louis.

MERIT, MILITARY, in Hesse-Cassel, an order instituted by the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel. The badge was, a gold cross of eight points, enamelled white; on a fillet in the centre, the motto, Pro virtute et fidelitate. It was worn at the button-hole, pendent to a blue ribbon edged with silver. See Pl. 7, fig. 10.

MERIT, MILITARY, of Poland, founded in 1791, by Stanislaus-Augustus, to reward the services of the officers of his army, who had distinguished themselves in defence of the independence of Poland against the Russians.

Upon the king's acceding to the confederation of Torgowitz, this order was suppressed, and those who had been admitted into it were obliged to give up their rank. It ceased to exist until 1807, when it was again recognized by Frederick-Augustus; and the present Emperor Alexander of Russia, as King of Poland, is considered Grand Master; and the order is divided into three classes, considered as nobility.

The first class is decorated with the following badge, which is worn scarfways, attached to a broad ribbon in stripes of black and blue, viz. a golden cross pattée, enamelled sable, with balls on the points: upon a circular centre or, surrounded with a wreath of laurel, is the white eagle of Poland, with wings expanded; and upon the four arms of the cross is inscribed, Vir-tuti Mili-tari. See Pl. 7, fig. 11. The first class also wear a silver star of eight points, upon which is represented the badge. See Pl. 8, fig. 11.

The second class suspend from the button-hole a similar badge to that worn by the first, but the cross is of gold.

The third class wear, in the same manner, a badge of the same formed cross in silver, with the letters S.A.R.P. disposed on the four limbs, and upon the circular centre the figure of St. George slaying the dragon. See Pl. 7, fig. 13.

MERIT, MILITARY, of Portugal. See AVIS.

MERIT, MILITARY, of Prussia, instituted in 1740, by Frederick the Great, to reward the services and valour of military men. It was founded instead of the order of Generosity, which had been discontinued, and is composed of only one class of knights. The badge is, a cross of eight points, enamelled blue; upon the upper limb, the letter F, ensigned with a regal crown; and upon the other limbs the words, divided and disposed as follow, Pour-le me-rite. Between the principal angles are four eagles of gold, with wings elevated. See Pl. 7, fig. 16. The badge is worn suspended round the neck, from a rich black watered ribbon, with a narrow border of silver. Three oak-leaves in gold are attached to the ring at the top of the badge, as a particular mark of honour for any extraordinary merit.

MERIT, MILITARY, of Wirtemberg, instituted in 1759, by Duke Charles-Eugene of Wirtemberg; and renewed 6th November, 1799, by King Frederick I. This order is divided into three classes, viz. grand crosses, commanders, and knights. To be admitted into the first, it is necessary to have had a chief command in the army, during a campaign; and for admission into the third, it is requisite to have served as an officer for twenty-five years.

A general chapter of the order is held annually on the 6th of November, to receive the claims of candidates for admission, which are submitted to the king, who has the sole nomination. The eldest, or senior grand cross, enjoys a yearly pension during life, of 400 Rhenish florins, which is paid to him, although he may have resigned his commission. The two eldest, or senior commanders, receive, likewise, annual pensions of 200 florins each; and each of the four eldest, or senior knights, also receive, annually, pensions of 100 florins.

Upon the renewal of this order, which was intended to supersede that of St. Charles of Wirtemberg, it was expressly ordained that the knights of the order of St. Charles might exchange their crosses for those of Military Merit, in case they thought proper so to do; if not, they were at liberty to retain them as long as they lived; but upon the demise of the last knight, the order of St. Charles was to exist no longer. To the senior knight is perpetually confided the Protocol of this order of Military Merit. He is, as it were, invested with the dignity of chancellor, and superintends the business of the official department.

The badge is, a cross pattée gold, enamelled white; upon the centre is a crown of laurel, encircled with a blue fillet, inscribed, Furchtlos und treu; on the centre, upon the reverse, which is blue, is a W, with a regal crown over it in gold. On the top of the cross is a ducal coronet, with raised points from the leaves, like an eastern crown, by which it is attached to a ring, and suspended from a yellow ribbon, edged with black. See Pl. 7, fig. 17. It is worn by the grand crosses scarfways from left to right; and by the commanders, round the neck, who, as a particular mark of distinction, have a small golden sabre placed above the crown. The knights suspend the badge from the button-hole. The grand crosses also wear, on the left side of their habits, a kind of star, formed like the badge, but without the crown. See Pl. 8, fig. 12.

MILICE DE JESUS CHRIST, an order established in the north of Italy, and the middle of France, by St. Dominic, to preserve the rights of the church, and employ arms in defence of religion. It survived the founder but a short time. The badge was a plain black cross.

MILITARY BRAVERY, or HESSIAN ORDER POUR LA VERTUE MILITAIRE, instituted 5th March, 1769, by his serene highness Frederick II. Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, as a recompense for military merit. The sovereign is grand master, to whom belongs the sole right of nomination. It is not limited as to number or rank, and foreign officers are likewise admitted for meritorious services in the time of war; but in peace the order is conferred only upon field-officers. There is only one class; and the badge is, an eight-pointed cross of gold, enamelled of pale crimson, with golden lions rampant between the principal angles; upon the upper limb is the cypher of the founder, F. L. and on the other three the motto, thus divided, Vir-tu-ti, in letters of gold. The cross is surmounted by a crown, from the top of which it is suspended by a ring from a broad blue watered ribbon, edged with white or silver embroidery. See Pl. 7, fig. 18. It is worn round the neck.

MILITARY ORDER OF SAVOY, instituted by Victor-Emmanuel, King of Sardinia, 14th of August, 1815, to reward military services. There are two badges, one a plain cross of gold, with the letters V. E. upon the centre, ensigned with the crown; the other is a plain cross of gold, enamelled crimson, voided, surrounded with a wreath of laurel proper, with an imperial crown of gold upon the top, and suspended by a ring from a broad blue watered ribbon. See Pl. 7, fig. 19.

MIRROR, an order instituted in 1410, by Ferdinand of Castile, after a victory obtained over the Moors. The knights were decorated with a chain of fleurs-de-lis, intermixed with griffins.

MONT JOIE, in Palestine. In 1180, a society of gentlemen who devoted themselves to the protection of Mont Joie, or Monte Gioia, where they built a castle for the protection of pilgrims, and from whence they had the first view of the Holy City, were the founders of this order. They formed other establishments, in Syria, Castile, and Catalonia, and the institution was confirmed by Pope Alexander III. They were sometimes called Knights of Mofrac, from a town in Castile, which was part of their possessions. According to some writers, the badge was a red cross, like that of the knights templars; others say, that it was a red star of five points, placed on a white marble; but Palliott is positive that it was a white cross of five rays, and that their mantle was red. They at first observed the rule of St. Benedict, which was afterwards changed to that of St. Augustine; and their vows were those of poverty, chastity, and obedience. In war, they bore on one side of their ensign the figure of the Holy Virgin, and on the other, the cross or badge of the order.

King Ferdinand, surnamed the Saint, united the order with that of Calatrava.

NAME OF JESUS, an order instituted in 1656, by Charles-Gustavus, King of Sweden, in memory of his coronation. The badge is, a glory of gold, encircling the letters I·H·S· upon a silver centre. See Pl. 7, fig. 20. It is suspended from a ribbon of silver mohair; and the same badge is embroidered in silver upon the left side of the habit.

NATIONAL ORDER OF FRANCE. This order was projected in 1789, by one of the committees of the Constituent Assembly. The badge was, an eight-pointed cross of gold, enamelled white, with fleurs-de-lis between the principal angles; upon a circular centre azure, the letters R. N. (signifying Recompense Nationale) surrounded with a fillet, inscribed Institué en 1789. On the centre of the reverse, two hands conjoined in fesse, and upon the fillet, Prix de vertu. See Pl. 7, fig. 21. It was suspended by the tri-coloured ribbon, blue, white, and red.

NEIGHBOURLY LOVE, a German order, instituted in 1708, by the Empress Elisabeth-Christiana, when Archduchess of Austria. Both sexes of noble families were admitted into it. The badge was, an eight-pointed cross of gold, enamelled white, the middle red, encircled with a fillet, inscribed, Amor proximi. See Pl. 8, fig. 1. It was worn pendent at the left breast by a red ribbon.

NOBLE PASSION. A German order instituted in 1704, by John-George, Duke of Saxe-Weissenfelds and Querfurt, to recompense the services of the nobility of his dominions, and to inspire great and elevated sentiments among them.

The badge was, a gold medal, enamelled white, upon which was a golden star of eight points, charged with a cross humettée gules, surmounted with an oval azure, upon which the cipher J. G. in letters of gold; a glory issuant between the principal angles of the first-named cross, and surrounded by the motto, J'aime l'honneur qui vient par la vertu. See Pl. 8, fig. 2. On the reverse, the arms of the principality of Querfurt, encircled with the inscription, Société de la Noble Passion, instituée par J. G. D. D. S. Q. 1704. This badge is worn scarfways over the right shoulder, pendent to a broad white ribbon, edged with gold.

The Duke of Saxe-Weissenfelds, of the Albertine branch of the Electoral Family of Saxony, is sovereign of this order, who holds his court at Weissenfelds, where all the knights of the order assemble once a year, on the grand festival of St. John, when each contributes, according to his ability, to the maintenance of the maimed or decayed soldiers in the service of the sovereign.

OAK OF NAVARRÉ, a Spanish order, said to have been instituted by Don Garcias Ximenes, so early as the year 722; from the superstitious belief that he had seen a cross on the top of an oak, worshipped by angels, which inspired him with courage to obtain a victory over the Moors. The order continued to flourish for two centuries, when it fell into disuse, and its large possessions reverted to the family of Ximenes; on the failure of which, they came to the crown, and the King of Spain assigned a part of them, to the then newly instituted order of Charles III. The badge was, a plain red cross issuant from the top of an oak-tree, which was worn on the right side of the garment. See Pl. 8, fig. 3.

ORDO EQUESTRIS, of the Roman Empire. - This order is quite distinct in its origin from all others; and is no less distinguished from them in its nature, the title being an hereditary honour, while in all others it seems to be an invariable principle, that real personal merit alone can obtain admission. The notion of a regular order of knighthood also implies certain ceremonies at the admission of its members, and certain peculiar laws by which those members are bound. But neither of these exists in the present case; the members are appointed by letters patent, and they are bound by no laws, but those which extend to all the empire. This difference gives to the dignity now treated of, more the appearance of a rank in nobility, than an order of knighthood; but its name and correspondence of rank justly entitle it to a place among other orders.

It has been already shown under the head Knighthood, that one division of the people of ancient Rome, was distinguished as the Ordo Equestris; and in the same place were described the privileges and badges of this class. It is not possible to state with accuracy, what time elapsed between the extinction of this dignity and the origin of its name-sake. The Ordo Equestris of ancient Rome shared the universal degeneracy of the empire, and was involved in its destruction. When, after a long interval, a new empire rose out of its ruins, it rose in an entirely different form, and a totally distinct people predominated. They had brought in with them new modes of government, new sentiments, and a new language. This last was too inferior to that which it found established, to displace it entirely or immediately: the Latin language was corrupted in a two-fold manner; new words were introduced into it, and its own classical terms were applied in a sense little corresponding with their original signification.

They were employed to distinguish officers unknown to the old government, and from these have been formed many of our modern titles. The German Emperors were fond of considering themselves as the successors of the Roman Emperors of the west, and indulged this vanity many ways; of which the most decided was the assumption of the title of Cæsar. When this is considered, it will be no matter of astonishment, that the name of Ordo Equestris should have been revived by them, without the existence of any close resemblance between the things signified in its ancient and modern application. Thus much may be said in favour of their familiarity, that the original institution of the Equestrian Order at Rome was intended to supply the army with cavalry, and, for a length of time did so entirely; and the being raised to the Equestrian Order in Germany, was an admission into a rank, which, in the early period of modern history, was entitled to serve in war on horseback, and constantly did so, forming the only noble and the most efficient part of every army.

Of the two grand divisions of noble and ignoble, with which all modern nations commenced their existence, the former was subdivided into many gradations of dignity, each of which was distinguished by some title, and of which the limits became every day clearly defined. The criterion by which the above-mentioned principal division was at first effected was, beyond all doubt, personal merit, and the same qualification continually rendered it advantageous to add to the numbers of the noble from the most deserving of the ignoble; and we find that a power of so doing was always vested in the sovereign. In the exercise of this power, it might frequently be advisable to add to the number of the noble those to whom it was not necessary to reward with a title of honour; and this class of men was, in every nation, distinguished by some general term, equivalent to our word gentleman.

It was this rank that, in Germany, was distinguished as the Ordo Equestris, and naturally in precedence following next after the dignity of Baron, the lowest title of honour; and this place it occupies at present. Germany is the only country in which this body of men has continued separate, and retained a legitimate and acknowledged title; and the reason is this:—In all other countries, the being ennobled included nothing more than the simple act; it made a man a fit companion for all of that half of the community into which he was admitted, and entitled him to look down with contempt upon that half which he had just quitted; but unless he made his way into the higher ranks of nobility, he belonged to no well-defined and united order. The consequence was, that when gradual civilization and freedom removed the degrading marks from the ignoble portion of society, the distinction of the others was encroached upon and finally lost. In Germany, a different result was partially produced; the free gentlemen of the empire, which signified the same as the Ordo Equestris, composed a corporate body; and as the numbers of those increased, who were admitted into the ranks of gentility, they soon became a distinct class, and partook rather of the dignity of the titled nobility above them, than of the untitled gentry beneath.

In the first formation of the order, it is most probable that the dignity was never extended to any, who did not before hold, or upon his admission obtain, a fee of the empire; and these members formed a body corporate, into which none were admitted, who did not, like them, hold fees of the empire. As the emperors have granted the rank of the order to numbers who were not thus qualified, it may be said to consist of two branches, differing in the respect just mentioned, and the same in honours, privileges, and precedence. The admission is by codicillis honorarii, or letters patent of ennoblement, under the great seal of the empire, in which the person intended to be honoured, is constituted a knight of the sacred Roman empire, and it is commanded that he be classed in that society of knights, in the same manner as if he had been born of the Equestrian Order. He is also granted the full enjoyment of all honours, offices, rights, privileges, and immunities, to which all other knights are entitled, whether born of the order, or created by stroke of the sword, or by word of mouth. The patent makes the title hereditary through all direct branches, whether male or female; and contains a command to all dependent princes, and a request to others, to receive him as a member of the Equestrian Order.

From what has been said, it is manifest, that this order was an entirely civil institution, and very different in its origin from those, which at a later period were established in every state. That it existed much earlier than the others, is certain; but that it did not form the model from which they were constructed, is equally clear, both from the constitution of the orders themselves, and a consideration of the circumstances in which they originated.

OUR LADY OF BETHLEHEM, an order instituted in 1459, by Pope Pius II. for the defence of the Island of Lemnos, retaken from the Turks.

OUR LADY OF GRACE, an order instituted in 1223, by

OUR LADY OF THE LILY. See LILY OF NAVARRE.

OUR LADY OF LORETTO. Pope Sextus V. instituted this order in 1587, upon the creation of a new see at Loretto, and raising that church to the rank of a cathedral. The knights were numerous, and enjoyed many privileges. They were styled Chevaliers Dores, and were distinguished by a badge, or gold medallion, enamelled with the image of the Virgin, which was suspended from the button-hole. The order was confirmed by Pope Paul III. but abolished by Gregory XIII.

OUR LADY OF MERCY, in Spain, instituted by James I. King of Arragon, about the year 1218, in consequence of a vow made by him to the Virgin Mary, during his captivity in France. The object was, the redemption of captives from the Moors, in which the order laid out considerable sums of money. At the foundation, only men were admitted; but in 1261, it was extended to both sexes, by Mary du Secours, a lady of quality at Barcelona. The badge common to both was, a small shield, per fesse, gules and or; in chief, a cross pattée argent; in base, four palets of the first, for Arragon. The shield ensigned with a ducal coronet, from the top of which it was suspended by a ring. See Pl. 8, fig. 4.

OUR LADY OF MONTESAT, an order instituted by James II. King of Arragon and Valence, and confirmed by Pope John XXII. in 1317, to replace the order of Templars, and to oppose the incursions of the Moors. This order was seated in the town of Montesat, placed under the rule of St. Benoist, endowed with the possessions of the Templars, and put under the jurisdiction of the order of Calatrava, from which the first knights were created.

In 1399, this order acquired the endowments of that of St. George d'Alfama, which had been founded about the year 1201, in the diocese of Tortosa.

The grand mastership of the order of Montesat was annexed to the crown of Spain, 1587. The badge is of gold, in the shape of a lozenge, upon which is a cross humettée, within a bordure gules; upon the top is an open-fronted or knight's helmet, with banners, in saltier, placed behind it, and from a ring, all of gold, it is suspended by a red ribbon. The cross is likewise worn in stuff or cloth, sewed upon a white habit. See Pl. 8, fig. 5.

OUR LADY OF MOUNT CARMEL, and ST. LAZARUS OF JERUSALEM. The order of Our Lady of Mount Carmel was instituted by King Henry IV. of France, in 1607; and confirmed by the pope, who empowered the king to nominate the grand master. Henry IV. by letters patent, dated July, 1608, abolished the dignity of grand master of the order of St. Lazarus, and all the commanderies, priories, and prebendaries, belonging to it, and the collocation to which depended upon the grand master, were annexed to that of Our Lady of Mount Carmel. The king conferred the dignity of grand master of these united orders, upon Philibert de Nerestan, his chamberlain, who had previously been grand master of the order of St. Lazarus. His descendants succeeded to that dignity; and in 1645, Louis XIV. invested Charles Achilles de Nerestan with the grand mastership, confirmed by Pope Innocent X. when the order was denominated Knights of Our Lady of Mount Carmel and of St. John of Jerusalem.

The badge is, an eight-pointed cross of gold, enamelled red, edged with white; upon a circular centre or, the figures of the Virgin and Child; between the principal angles of the cross, four fleurs-de-lis; and upon each of the points, a small gold ball. The reverse is green; and in the middle is represented St. Lazarus rising from the tomb. The badge was suspended by a ring from a broad crimson-coloured ribbon; and worn either upon the breast or scarfways. See Pl. 8, fig. 6.

Previous to the year 1696, the order had no particular uniform: but the following habit was then settled by the grand master. That of grand master consisted of a Dalmatic of silver tissue; over which was worn a long mantle of amaranth-coloured velvet, bestrewed with fleurs-de-lis of gold and monograms, or ciphers, and trophies of victory, all richly embroidered in gold and silver: the monogram, or cipher, was the name of Maria, placed between two regal crowns. That of the knights was a Dalmatic of white satin, upon which was the cross, of proportionate length and breadth. Above this, was worn a mantle of amaranth-coloured velvet; and on the left side was embroidered the cross, bearing the effigy of the Virgin Mary in the centre. They also wore a cap of black velvet, adorned with black ostrich's feathers, and a small white heron's plume in the midst.

Although no particular collar was assigned, the knights generally surrounded their arms with one of gold, with the letters M. A. in ciphers interlaced.

In the year 1779, Louis-Stanislaus Xavier, Comte de Provence, brother of Louis XVI. then grand master of these united equestrian confraternities, with the consent of the king, separated them; and St. Lazarus became the first order, and Our Lady of Mount Carmel the second. The former was divided into two classes, viz. grand commanders and commanders.

The badge of St. Lazarus, which merely varies in size to distinguish each class, is a golden cross of eight points, enamelled vert, edged with white; upon the points, a small ball; and between the principal angles, four fleurs-de-lis or: on a circular centre, is represented St. Lazarus rising from the tomb, surrounded with a green fillet, edged with gold, and inscribed with the words, Atavis et armis, in letters of gold. See Pl. 8, fig. 9. This badge is suspended by a ring, from a broad green-coloured watered ribbon, worn by both classes round the neck, who likewise wear, (differing only in size, to denote the class) upon habits, an embroidered green eight-pointed cross, edged with gold, charged on the centre with a plain cross humettée argent, pommetée or, upon which is inscribed the motto, Atavis et armis. See Pl. 8, fig. 15. The order of Our Lady of Mount Carmel was thenceforward annexed to the Élèves of the Ecole Militaire; and the badge and ribbon remained as before described.

Since the return of Louis XVIII. to the throne of France, these orders have not been conferred, and may be considered extinct.

OUR LADY OF THE ROSARY, of Toledo, in Spain, instituted by Roderick, Archbishop of Toledo, in 1212, for the defence of the Roman Catholic religion against the Moors. Several of the nobility and principal persons of the city entered the order upon its first institution; but it soon fell into disrepute. It is said to have derived its appellation from the knights being obliged daily to repeat a rosary to the Virgin Mary. The badge of the order was, a cross patonce, per cross and saltier, counterchanged, argent and sable, surmounted on the centre with a medal or, enamelled with the image of the Virgin, supporting the infant upon the left arm, and holding in the right hand a rosary, all proper. See Pl. 8, fig. 10.

OUR LADY OF THE THISTLE, or OF BOURBON, in France, instituted in 1369, by Louis II. Duke of Bourbon, and then called the Order of the Golden Shield, and conferred upon gentlemen who assembled at Moulins. In the year following, its appellation was changed to that of Our Lady of the Thistle; from which time, none but the nobility were admitted into it. The number was fixed at twenty-six; and the knights, at all times, wore a sash of sky-blue velvet, upon which was embroidered, in gold, the word Espérance.

OUR LADY OF VICTORY. This order is said to have been founded after a famous victory at Lepanto, gained by the Christians over the Turks, on the 11th October, 1571.

PASSION OF JESUS CHRIST, an order instituted in 1380, by Richard II. King of England, and Charles VI. King of France, on the plan of the other holy and military orders of Templars, St. John, Teutonic, &c. and for the same purpose—the expulsion of the Infidels from the Holy Land, and establishing in it the Christian religion. The number of knights was to have been one thousand, and each attended by an esquire and three servants, properly armed; the whole under the command of a grand justiciary and grand bailiff; but the order was not of long duration. The badge was, a red cross, of the breadth of four fingers, edged with gold, and charged on the centre with an octagon shield sable, thereon a holy lamb; it was sewed upon a white habit. See Pl. 8, fig. 16.

PEACE, an order founded in France, in 1229, by Ameneus, Archbishop of Auch, and some nobles of Gascony, to restrain the violence of the Albigeois and the brigands, called routiers. It was abolished in 1260.

PHŒNIX, an order instituted by Prince Hohenlohe Waldembourg Bartenstein, who attained the age of one hundred years, and reckoned four emperors in his family, to commemorate which he founded this order; but at what period, cannot be correctly ascertained. It was originally intended to be conferred upon his own family, but since which it has been given to persons who have rendered particular services to his house.

Several persons, distinguished by their birth and rank, solicited admission into this order, which induced the princes of whom it was composed, to found a second class under particular statutes; and some officers of the army of Condé were likewise admitted, under the obligation of attachment to the House of Hohenlohe; and this second class consisted of commanders and knights. The Prince of Hohenlohe is grand master.

The badge of the members of the family, or first class, is, a gold cross of eight points, enamelled white, with three drops of gold upon each limb, and flames of the same metal between the principal angles; upon a circular centre azure, surrounded with a red fillet, the words, In senio, in letters of gold. See Pl. 11, fig. 6. It is sus-pendent from a broad red ribbon, with a border of white and yellow. This class likewise wear a silver star of eight obtuse points, upon which is a cross like the badge extending to the angles of the points. See Pl. 11, fig. 7.

The badge of the second class is, a kind of cross pattée of gold, the centre part of each extremity rounded, enamelled white; upon a circular centre azure, surrounded with rays of gold in eight points, a phoenix, in flames, proper. See Pl. 11, fig. 9. It is suspended by a ring from a red ribbon, with an outer border of black, and an inner one of white; worn round the neck by the commanders, and by the knights from the button-hole.

The commanders likewise wear, on the left side of their habits, a star of gold; upon the centre, which is circular, is the phoenix in flames, surrounded with a fillet of silver edged with blue, upon which is inscribed, Ex flammis clarior. See Pl. 11, fig. 8.

PIUS. This order was instituted in 1660, by Pope Pius IV. The number of knights was at first limited to three hundred and seventy-five, but was afterwards increased to upwards of five hundred and thirty. The badge of the order was, the figure of St. Ambrose, worn pendent to a gold chain round the neck.

POLAR STAR, instituted 17th April, 1748, by Frederick I. King of Sweden, and Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, as a reward for civil merit. In 1751, it was renewed, with some alterations, by Adolphus-Frederick, Duke of Holstein Gottorp, his immediate successor. The reigning king of Sweden is always grand master; and those who are nominated or elected as knights must be faithfully attached to the king, and distinguished for talents, learning, and works of general utility, and must be of the Lutheran communion.

At the first institution of the order, the number was limited to thirty-six, twelve of whom had the title of commanders, exclusive of the senators of the realm, and knights of the seraphim, who were also commanders of this order. The princes of the blood royal of Sweden are born knights, and may receive the ensigns of it whenever the sovereign of the order thinks proper. It was afterwards unrestricted, but still divided into two classes, commanders and knights; the higher honour being only attainable by promotion from the lower.

The badge is, a golden cross of eight points, enamelled white, with ducal coronets between the four principal angles; upon a circular centre azure, surrounded with a fillet, inscribed with the motto, Nescit occasum, is a star of five points argent; the reverse the same, omitting the fillet and motto. On the upper points of the cross, the regal crown of Sweden, from the top of which it is suspended by a ring from a broad rich black watered ribbon; and worn round the neck by the commanders, and the knights suspend the same badge, but somewhat smaller, from the coat button-hole. See Pl. 11, fig. 13.

The collar, which is worn only upon particular festivals, is composed of gold-chased ornaments, linked together, encompassing mullets of five points, enamelled white, and edged with gold, and two letters F, back to back, enamelled blue, edged with gold alternately; the letters crowned with the regal crown of Sweden, richly chased. To the centre of the collar, is attached the badge before described. See Pl. 11, fig. 18.

The commanders likewise wear, on the left side of their upper garment, a star of silver embroidery, formed like the badge, omitting the regal crown at the top of the cross. See Pl. 11, fig. 14.

In 1783, King Gustavus III. ordained and decreed that eight ribbons of commanders should especially be assigned and appropriated to so many bishops; and that twelve small crosses should be conferred upon an equal number of dignitaries of the church, who by seniority, sound learning, and acknowledged merit, were, or might henceforward be, deemed worthy of being invested with this ensign of honour.

PORCUPINE, in France, instituted in 1393, by Louis of France, Duke of Orleans, second son of Charles V. to grace the solemnity of the baptism of his eldest son, called Charles of Orleans. It consisted of the sovereign, and twenty-five knights, who were sworn to defend the state, the religion, and the sovereign; but the number was augmented by Louis XII. son of Charles of Orleans, after whose death the order was discontinued.

The collar of the order was composed of three rows of gold chain, and pendent thereto was a porcupine of the same metal, standing upon a tuft of grass in green enamel, ornamented with flowers. See Pl. 8, fig. 13. The motto was, Cominus et eminus.

The habit consisted of a cloak of violet-coloured velvet, with an ermine chaperon and tunic.

The order was sometimes called, L'Ordre du Cameo, or the Order of the Cameo, because the knights, at the time of their admission, received a ring set with cameo, whereupon the figure of a porcupine was cut in relief.

RED EAGLE, THE ORDER OF SINCERITY, OR THE RED EAGLE OF BAYREUTH, now considered a Prussian Order, is said to have been instituted by Christian-Ernest, Margrave of Bayreuth, in 1705; it was an order military and civil, and the Margraves of Bayreuth were declared sovereigns of the order.

The badge was, an eight-pointed white enamelled cross of gold; the centre, on one side, having the red eagle of Brandenburg, bearing on its breast a shield charged with the arms of Hohenzollern, encircled with the motto, Toujours le même; upon the reverse, the name of the reigning Margrave, in letters of gold, upon red enamel, surmounted with an electoral cap of red velvet, turned up with ermine; and upon the quarters of the cross, L'Ordre de la sincérité. See Pl. 9, fig. 1.

This badge was worn round the neck, pendent upon the middle of the breast, suspended from a rich broad ponceau-coloured watered ribbon, with a border of gold, in chain-work embroidery. The knights likewise wore upon the left side of the upper garment, an eight-pointed star of gold, the four central points of which were longer than the others; in the middle was a cross pattée, embroidered in silver, and upon it, embroidered in letters of gold, the motto of the order, Toujours le même. See Pl. 9, fig. 2. The dress of the order consisted of a full suit of superfine cloth, of an amaranth colour, lined with white silk; the coat and waistcoat bordered with gold twist, the buttons of gold, and the button-holes likewise of gold twist; the sword was of gold, with a rich sword-knot; the hat bordered with a gold edging, and adorned with a cockade of white feathers. Such was the state of this order in 1766: from that period until 1791, it underwent many changes under succeeding Margraves, but of which no trace appears in the statutes.

In 1791, Alexander, Margrave of Bayreuth, having resigned his states to his kinsman and immediate successor, Frederick-William II. King of Prussia, his majesty, by letters patent, dated 12th of June, 1792, declared himself grand master of the order, giving it the rank next after that of the Black Eagle in his dominions, and attaching the dignity of grand master to the crown of Spain for ever.

The insignia of this order was totally altered after 1766, and was now composed of an eight-pointed white enamelled Maltese cross, having in the four principal angles an eagle of gold, in red enamel, with wings expanded, and on the head an antique crown; on the centre, upon white enamel, a red eagle, charged on the breast with a shield of the arms of Hohenzollern, and standing upon a crown of laurel; on the centre, upon the reverse, the letters F. W. R. the initials of his majesty's name and title, in Italic characters of black, upon white enamel. This badge, or cross, was surmounted by a regal diadem of gold, by which it was suspended from a broad rich watered ribbon in three stripes, the middle white, and those on the sides a deep orange colour: it was worn scarfways over the right shoulder. See Pl. 9, fig. 4.

The star was in all respects the same as that of the order of the Black Eagle in Prussia, except that there d eagle, bearing the arms of Hohenzollern upon its breast, and standing upon a crown of laurel, was embroidered upon silver in the centre of the star, encircled with a fillet of silver, bearing the motto of the order in letters of gold; and which star was worn upon the left breast of the upper garment. See Pl. 9, fig. 3.

Upon the 18th of January, 1810, Frederick-William III. King of Prussia, added a second and third class to this order, and changed again the insignia; the knights of the order of the Black Eagle of Prussia being declared members of the first class of this order of the Red Eagle. The badge of the premier class is, a plain cross pattée, gold, enamelled white; upon the centre the red eagle, imperially crowned, bearing on its breast the arms of Hohenzollern, and standing upon the crown of laurel, with the initials F. W. upon the reverse, pendent by the ribbon before described; and worn scarfways over the shoulder, (See Pl. 9, fig. 5.); together with a silver star of eight points on the left breast, having, upon a centre of gold, the red eagle, as mentioned before, encircled with a fillet of silver, with the motto, Sincère et constant, in letters of gold, upon the upper part, and two branches of oak upon the lower. See Pl. 9, fig. 6.

The second class bear the same badge, somewhat smaller, suspended from the neck; and the third class, the like badge, but of still smaller dimensions, from the button-hole.

Those of the second class, who have been promoted from the third, bear, as a mark of distinction, three oak-leaves, in gold, upon the ring of the badge, or cross; and those of the first class, who have passed through the two inferior ranks, have the same distinction on the badge, and the same decoration upon the upper ray of the star.

It appears that the knights of this order of the Red Eagle, created by the Margraves of Bayreuth,—Frederick, Christian-Frederick, and Alexander, were not recognised by the King of Prussia, when he became grand master of the order, unless they paid the fees of honour a second time, which many of them refused to do, and who continued to wear the insignia as before described: whilst those who submitted to the imposition, and the knights nominated by the king, wore the badge and star as altered by the court of Berlin; each styling themselves Knights of the Red Eagle, of which nothing but personal degradation could deprive them. Of course, as these first-created knights dropped into the grave, these petty feuds ceased to exist, and it is not likely that any of them are still living to complain.

RE-UNION, instituted by the Emperor Napoleon, 18th October, 1811, at the time of the re-union of Holland with France, and to replace the order of the Union. It was founded to reward those subjects, who had distinguished themselves in the exercise of any civil or military functions. The order was composed of two hundred grand crosses, one thousand commanders, and ten thousand knights. The emperor was grand master, and the council of the order composed of seven grand crosses, a grand chancellor, and a grand treasurer.

The badge was, a silver star of twelve points, placed upon rays, or glory, of gold; the motto, A Jamais, twice repeated, appearing between the points, which terminate with small golden balls: upon a circular centre gold, the letter N, between two branches of laurel, which are surrounded with a blue fillet, also inscribed, A Jamais. On the top of the badge is an imperial crown, with the name of Napoleon on the rim. Upon the centre of the reverse is a chair, or throne of state; and on the fillet, Tout pour l'Empire. See Pl. 8, fig. 14. This badge was suspended by a ribbon, and worn scarfways from right to left, by the grand crosses; round the neck, by the commanders; and by the knights, from the button-hole. The grand crosses likewise wore a silver star upon the left side. The King of France abolished the order in 1815.

ROUND TABLE, said to have been founded by Arthur, King of England, in the year 516, who upon his return from the wars, in which he had conquered the Saxons, Norwegians, Scotland, and part of Wales, caused a large round table to be made, whereat he entertained twenty-four of his principal warriors, instituting them Knights of the Round Table; and this identical table, it is pretended, is still in the castle at Winchester, where, it is said, the knights used to assemble.

ROYAL ORDER, of Spain, instituted in 1609, by Joseph Napoleon, when placed upon the throne of that kingdom, to attach the Spaniards, and reward the services of those who had been zealous in his cause. The order was both civil and military, and divided into three classes. The badge was, a star of five points, enamelled red, edged with gold, with balls on the points, and a circular centre, of the same metal, charged with a lion rampant, and over his head a regal crown, surrounded with a blue fillet; on the centre of the reverse, a castle. It was suspended by a ring from a red ribbon.

ROYAL ORDER, of Westphalia, instituted 15th December, 1809, by Jerome Napoleon, when declared King of Westphalia, to reward services rendered to the state, and to his person, by useful discoveries, traits of humanity, and heroic actions. It was both a civil and military order, and divided into three classes; but abolished in 1813, with the new Westphalian government. The badge was a crown, and thereon an eagle, with wings expanded, imperially crowned, supported upon the dexter side by a lion; and on the sinister, by a horse; and above, another eagle in the same position, imperially crowned.

ST. ALEXANDER NEWSKI, a Russian order, instituted by the Czar Peter I. and confirmed by the Czarina Catharine, in 1726, and since by succeeding emperors. The ensign of the order is, a cross pattée red, edged with gold; the centre being enamelled white, and thereon St. Alexander on horseback, all proper; in each angle an imperial eagle, the cross surmounted with an imperial crown proper. It is worn pendent to a broad red ribbon sashways from left to right, over the left shoulder, hanging down on the left side, with a gold star of eight points, embroidered on the outer garment. See Pl. 9, fig. 7 and 8.

ST. ANDREW, in Russia, instituted in 1696, by the Czar Peter Alexiowitz, called Peter the Great, to animate and reward his nobles and chief officers, in the wars against the Turks. It was conferred on those who signalized themselves in this service. St. Andrew being the patron of the order, that apostle, according to tradition, was the founder of Christianity among the Moscovites. The badge of the order is, the image of St. Andrew on the cross, richly chased and enamelled, upon an imperial eagle of gold, the heads of the eagle ducally crowned, and over both the heads one imperial crown; in the right claw a sceptre, and in the left a mound. It is worn upon ordinary occasions, pendent to a blue ribbon, sashways over the right shoulder; and a star of eight points, embroidered on the left side of the outer garment: but upon certain festivals, the badge is worn pendent to a collar of gold, composed of imperial eagles, ducally crowned, and over both heads an imperial crown; having in the right claw a sceptre, and in the left a mound; upon the breast a shield charged with St. George slaying the dragon, and alternately with ovals charged with a cross saltier azure, and shields ensigned with an imperial crown, and charged with the letters G. G. in a cipher surmounting four banners, two and two, in saltier. See Pl. 9, fig. 10 and 13.

ST. ANNE, of Russia, instituted by the Duke of Holstein Gottorp, at Keel, in Holstein, in 1738. The family of Holstein having ascended the Russian throne since that period; and Paul, Grand Duke of Russia, having become grand master, it is generally ranked among the orders of that empire. The badge of the order is, a cross composed of four large rubies set in gold, the angles between the cross being set with diamonds; and on the centre a medallion, enamelled with the figure of St. Anne. See Pl. 9, fig. 9. It is worn pendent to a broad crimson watered ribbon, edged with yellow.

The knights wear a silver star of eight points embroidered on the outer garment; in the centre of which is a red cross on a gold ground, with the following motto, on a red ground, Amantibus Justitiam Pietatem Fidem. See Pl. 9, fig. 14.

ST. ANTHONY, in Ethiopia, instituted by John, Emperor of Ethiopia, (vulgarly called Prester John,) in 370, by creating into a religious order of knighthood certain monks, who had lived an austere life in the desert, after the example of St. Anthony. He granted to these knights many privileges and revenues. They received the rule of St. Basil, wore a black garment, and had for their ensign a blue cross, edged with gold, in the form of the letter T. See Pl. 8, fig. 17.*

Their chief place of residence was in the Isle of Merse, where both the spiritual and temporal abbots resided; but they had many monasteries and convents in other parts of Ethiopia, with about two millions yearly revenue.

The knights vowed to defend the Christian religion; to yield obedience to their superiors; observe conjugal chastity; not to marry or receive any other holy orders, without license first obtained from the abbot; they were to guard the confines of the empire; and to go to war, when and where they were commanded.

The ancient monastery of St. Anthony was situated in the deserts of Thebais, near some mountains, where that famed hermit lived and died. The edifice was surrounded with an oval wall, about five hundred paces in circumference, and nearly forty feet high, to keep out the plundering Arabs. Pilgrims and other visitors were drawn up into it by a rope, let down from a kind of watch-house on the top of the wall, and wound up by a crane, which was turned by the monks within the enclosure. The cells of the monastery, which originally were more than three hundred, were reduced to about forty, time having laid the rest in ruins. These cells were more like sepulchral vaults for the dead, than chambers for the living, most of them being not above four feet high, five in width, and seven in length. Besides these cells, they had a common hall, a kitchen, and a strong tower, where they kept their provisions, and of which they commonly laid up a stock sufficiently for two years. The door that led into the monastery was plated with iron, and entered by means of a draw-bridge from a lower tower over against it, where the monks retired when closely besieged by the Arabs. But the greatest curiosity of the place was a subterraneous passage, about fifty paces long, which led to a rock without the walls, from whence issued a stream of excellent water, sufficient for all the uses of the monastery, and serving to water their little garden, which was stored with a variety of herbs and fruits. The beds of the monks were sheep-skins spread upon mats, and a bundle of rushes served them for a pillow; their drink was water, and their food chiefly the product of the garden.

* Edmondson, in his Body of Heraldry, calls it a cross flory azure, the base point thereof coupé, and the whole edged with gold.

ST. ANTHONY, of Hainault, an Austrian order, instituted in 1382, by Albert of Bavaria, on going upon an expedition against the Saracens. The ensign was, a gold collar, like a hermit's girdle, to which was pendent a small walking staff, or crutch, with a little golden bell. See Pl. 8, fig. 18.

ST. BLAISE, or, as it was sometimes called, ST. BASS, was founded in Armenia, about the commencement of the twelfth century, under the rule of St. Basil. The habit of the order was of sky-blue, with the badge (being a cross of gold, with the figure of St. Basil, the patron, in the centre) embroidered upon the breast. See Pl. 8, fig. 19. The knights were officers and servants to the kings of Armenia; and the order was at the height when the Armenian kings of the House of Lusignan held their court in the city of Acre.

ST. BLAISE AND THE VIRGIN MARY, an ecclesiastical as well as military order, supposed to have been instituted soon after that of the Knights Templars. The badge was, a red cross, with a medallion on the centre, enamelled with the image of St. Blaise; and when the knights assembled in chapter, or set out upon any military expedition, they wore a white habit, with the badge embroidered upon the breast. See Pl. 8, fig. 20.

ST. CATHARINE, a Russian order, instituted by the Czar Peter I. in 1714, for ladies. The ensign of the order is, a medal of gold, enriched with diamonds; on one side thereof, the image of St. Catharine; and on the other, a cross pattée enamelled, which is worn pendant to a broad white ribbon, resting on the right shoulder, and thence brought under the left arm. See Pl. 9, fig. 16. Those of the order also wear on the left breast of their upper vestment, a star embroidered, having in the centre a cross, with the motto round it, Par l'Amour et la Fidélité envers la Patrie. See Pl. 9, fig. 17.

ST. CATHARINE of MOUNT SINAI, said to have been instituted about the year 1063 or 1067. It has been disused many years, and authors differ much as to the badge; some asserting, that it was a wheel of six spokes gules, nailed argent, traversed with a cross potent or, and cantoned with four plain crosses. See Pl. 8, fig. 21. Others state, that it was only a wheel, either whole or broken, with a sword through it.

ST. CHARLES, of Wirtemberg. This order was instituted by Charles-Eugene, Duke of Wirtemberg-Stuttgart, 11th February, 1759. In the original statutes, it is expressed, "That his highness was resolved to establish this order, from a just persuasion, that such recompenses were the best suited to reward those officers, who had merited well of the sovereign, by their fidelity and bravery; and that such distinctions were, of all others, the most proper to awaken in their breasts a love of martial fame; to excite them, more and more, to a strict observance of their duties; and to arouse their zeal and emulation, in the painful, but honourable career of knightly prowess and military renown."

The reigning Duke of Wirtemberg-Stuttgart was the sovereign lord chief and grand master, the creation of knights depending upon his will only; but a duke in a state of minority could not confer it, nor had he even a right to name any one to be, in future, invested with the order.

The princes of the House of Wirtemberg are born knights of this order; and besides an unlimited number of princely persons in the military profession, it consisted of ten commanders, or grand crosses, and of twenty-four immediate knights, who enjoyed a yearly pension. The statutes assigned an annual pension to the ten senior commanders, or grand crosses, and to the senior twenty-four immediate knights, in the following proportion: the former enjoying each a yearly stipend of four, and the latter of two hundred florins.

In case a stipendiary commander dies, the senior stipendiary knight succeeds to his pension; and the senior knight, who enjoys no stipend, succeeds the one advanced.

The sovereign, however, notwithstanding this regulation, reserves to himself the prerogative of conferring, extraordinarily, the pension, or the dignity of grand cross; especially, whenever uncommon merit, or unusual circumstances, shall induce him to bestow such an evident and unequivocal mark of his princely munificence and favour.

This military order is not limited, with respect to the number of the knights companions who compose it; every officer in the ducal service, who had well deserved it, was sure to obtain the honour. It was destined as an encouragement for the brave, and as a remuneration well befitting those who should honourably acquire it. Illustrious birth, high descent, and genealogical antiquity, possessed not any particular pretensions towards the obtaining it; nor would such adventitious matters, unaided by long and faithful services, or unsupported by personal merit, authorize the claims of any one to this distinction.

Such persons as aspired thereto, and who were of the rank of subjects, were obliged to exhibit the most evident and incontrovertible proofs of their military talents and acquirements. They must have served the Serene House of Wirtemberg during the space of fifteen years; have taken an active part in two campaigns; or have distinguished themselves within the limited time; and that to an uncommon degree, by actions of acknowledged bravery and heroic valour. This last restriction was not merely confined to field or commissioned officers; non-commissioned officers, nay, even private soldiers might, upon the same principles aspire to it; and upon receiving the cross of the order, they were advanced to the rank of officers.

The following knights companions were especially nominated to direct and preside over the internal administration.

The senior commander shall execute the office of chancellor.

A knight companion, that of a counsellor.

The quarter-master of the regiment of foot-guards shall be the treasurer. And,

The two secretaries of the two companies of foot-guards shall be the heralds.

Moreover, the following officers, or servants, shall each enjoy a yearly pension or salary in the following proportions.

The chancellor, inclusive of the pension of	} 500
commander,
The counsellor, inclusive of the pension of	} 350
senior knight,
The treasurer,	150

be must live with his brethren on terms of peace, friendship, and fraternal affection; and with such sentiments and principles as inculcate and ordain the theory and practice of philanthropy, humanity, and all the social duties, towards all his fellow-creatures; never losing sight of this great law of the code of nature,—‘To do to others as you would they should do to you!’ since that maxim is the genuine and generous link of the chain which connects man to man, and which, with regard to the fabric of civilized society, must be considered as the headstone of the corner!”

Such was the military order of St. Charles, of Wirtemberg, which subsisted during a period of forty years and upwards, and which was indirectly suppressed by a more recent institution or renewal of the order of Military Merit, of Wirtemberg, in 1790. The knights of the different classes then living, most of whom obtained the cross of that order during the seven years war, continued to wear the same ensigns with which they were originally invested at the time of their individual creations; the major part of whom were generals and field-officers. See MERIT, MILITARY, of Wirtemberg.

ST. CONSTANTINE. This order is said to have been instituted A.C. 313, by Constantine the Great. Some historians relate the motives which induced the first of the Christian emperors to create an order of chivalry to have arisen from the following causes. Constantine was requested by the senate to assist them against the tyrant Maxentius; and he solemnly engaged to espouse their cause. When encamped in face of the enemy, he was apprehensive of hazarding a general engagement, from the superior force which Maxentius had under his command; but a celestial meteor appearing in the air, in the form of a luminous cross, on which were displayed the words, In hoc signo vinces, he was encouraged to attack the enemy; and a victory, equally memorable and glorious, crowned with success the efforts of this heaven-inspired, adventurous commander.

Providence having thus manifestly declared in favour of the emperor, he, after a success so miraculous and unexpected, granted to the Christians the free exercise of their religious worship; and when drawing towards his latter end, was himself baptized by Usebius, in 337.

After this signal victory, it is said that the emperor not only had this cross embroidered upon his standards and colours, but that he likewise created this military order in honour thereof.

But, however doubtful the origin of this order, (which has sometimes been called the Illustrious Order of the Golden Angel, and also, the Order of St. George,) the Abbé Giustiniani, who entitled himself a knight and grand cross of this order, asserted, in 1692, at Venice, that it was the most ancient of all others.

Those who wish to prove the antiquity of this order, produce letters from Pope Leo, in 456, which were addressed, it is said, to the Emperor Marcian, confirming the order under the rule of St. Basil: other letters of the year 489, from the Emperor Leo I. are likewise adduced; but although such letters may have been found in the archives of the court of Rome, they are not the less spurious, especially as they were first deposited there in 1533, together with other documents and charters equally suspicious; and it is in vain to attempt the proof of the existence of knighthood, previous to the twelfth century.

The Emperor Isaac Angelus Comnenus, who, in 1190, ordered the letters before alluded to, to be made out, and whom the Abbé Giustiniani calls the reformer of the order, is more likely to have been the founder of it, calling it the Order of Constantine, from the emperor of that name, and from whom the Comnenian family considered themselves lineally descended; or naming it after himself, Angelus, or the angelic, or after St. George, the immediate patron saint and martyr, it might have been denominated the Order of the Golden Angel, and that of St. George; both which appellations it seems to have borne. To the former of which refer, for the collar, badge, and habit of the order, in addition to the following particulars.

The sign of the order, which the knights wear on the left side of their mantles, is, a red cross, somewhat in the form of four fleurs-de-lis, conjoined at the extremities, surrounded with a border of gold, whereon are embroidered the four letters J H S V, meaning, In hoc signo vinces. The name of Jesus Christ, expressed by two letters, X and P, is placed on the middle, with the two letters A and Ω, one on each side of the monogram of our Saviour.

The council of the order is composed of fifty senators, who are grand crosses; and when the grand master assists in state, his robes are as follow:—the vest and small clothes are of imperial scarlet, with the stockings and shoes the same; above the vest is a cassock of silver, richly embroidered, with wide sleeves descending as low as the knees. This vest is fastened round the body with a girdle, lined with scarlet velvet, richly studded with silver, and about the neck with two rich cords of gold and scarlet silk, and large tassels at each end, hanging down to the ground: on the left side of the mantle, the cross of the order is richly embroidered in gold.

The cap worn by the grand master is made after the Macedonian fashion; it is one span in height, made of crimson velvet, lined with white satin, the four sides turned up, and on each side the monogram X P is embroidered in gold; the cap is likewise adorned with a black ostrich's feather.

The grand crosses, who are fifty in number, wear a blue vest and small-clothes, and over it a white vest, which descends as low as the knees; their stockings and shoes are also white, and the girdle of red velvet; their mantles, which are of blue damask, lined with white, are not so long as that of the grand master. The grand crosses also wear the great collar of the order, and a cap of blue satin, turned up on the four sides, with the monogram on each before described, and adorned with a white ostrich's feather.

In time of war, or when they fought for the faith, the knights wore a surcoat over their usual armour; it was of white stuff, in the form of a scapulary; and in the centre, the cross of the order, embroidered in red.

The popes conferred the grand mastership of this order on the House of Comnenus for ever; but in 1699, Andrew Angelus Flavius Comnenus, Titular Prince of Macedonia, and Duke of Drivasto, the last of that house, who had enjoyed the dignity many years, resigned the grand mastership to Francis Farnese, the then reigning Duke of Parma, to him and his heirs for ever. This resignation and donation were solemnly approved by Pope Innocent XII; and confirmed by brief, bearing date the 29th of October, in that year.

In 1735, the ducal House of Farnese became extinct in the male line, by the death of Anthony, the last duke; and Don Carlos, the eldest son of Philip V. King of Spain, by Elizabeth Farnese, sole heiress of that family, succeeding to the duchies of Parma and Placentia, succeeded also to the grand mastership of this order. This prince afterwards became Grand Duke of Tuscany, and King of Naples; and upon quitting Parma, commanded that the archives of the order should be transported to Florence, and afterwards to Naples, upon his accession to that throne. He then declared the order of St. Constantine a royal order, and annexed it to the crown of Naples for ever; and until the creation of the order of St. Januarius, in 1738, it was the first or sovereign order of that kingdom; but since that period, has been ranked as the second.

Since this order was annexed to the crown of Naples, it has been divided into four classes, viz. grand crosses, grand commanders, commanders, and knights; and these again into cavalieri di giustizia, and cavalieri di grazia, or knights received in virtue of their being persons of ancient nobility, or by favour of his majesty.

After the treaty of Paris, in 1814, the duchies of Parma and Placentia being given to the Arch-Duchess of Austria, Maria Louisa, Ex-Empress of France, this princess, on the 23rd of April, 1816, declared herself grand mistress of the order of Constantine; founding her claim from its having been annexed to the duchy of Parma for more than a century. The order is now considered as belonging to the two courts of Naples and Parma.

The two first classes, upon great ceremonies, wear the badge of St. George, pendent to the collar; but upon ordinary occasions, the cross of the order, surmounted by the crown, and pendent from a broad sky-blue coloured ribbon, with a small badge of St. George attached to the bottom of the cross. The two first classes likewise wear a star on the left side. See Pl. 4, fig. 3 and 17, and Pl. 3, fig. 21.

The commanders and knights wear a cross without the small badge of St. George pendent thereto, and somewhat less than the two senior classes; but the knights suspend it from the button-hole, by a narrower ribbon.

The order has, likewise, its great officers, chosen from the chief nobility of the kingdom, that of grand prior being especially attached to the episcopal see of Nola, a city celebrated in history, as the place where Augustus Cæsar breathed his last. For the collar, badge, and star, see GOLDEN ANGEL, or ST. GEORGE.

ST. COSMAS and ST. DAMIANUS, or KNIGHTS OF THE MARTYRS, in Palestine. These knights, or rather hospitalers, were so denominated from an hospital in Palestine, dedicated to St. Cosmas and St. Damianus, martyrs, where acts of charity were exercised towards sick strangers. They were obliged to other works of charity, such as to redeem captives, and bury the dead. They followed the rule of St. Basil, which was confirmed to them by Pope John XXII. The badge was, a cross, coupé, gules; in the centre whereof, upon an oval shield of gold, was depicted the figures of the two saints. The order was instituted in 1030, and abolished after the advantages gained by the Infidels over the Christians. The cross was borne upon a white habit. See Pl. 8, fig. 22.

Note.—Of this order, Edmondson remarks, that Schooneback, upon the authority of Giustiniani, pretends that such an order was instituted in the tenth century, and afterwards approved and confirmed by Pope Jean XX. in 1024. In this, however, Giustiniani blunders egregiously, and turns the religious order of Canons Regular of the Penitence of the Martyrs, who wear a red cross on their white habit, into an order of knighthood.

ST. ELIZABETH, an electoral order for ladies, instituted at Manheim, 13th October, 1766, by Elizabeth Augusta, Countess Palatine of the Rhine, Electress, Duchess of Bavaria, &c. It is composed of three classes, viz. princesses, ladies of the court or of honour, particularly attached to the Electoral Bavario Palatine court, and to that of the Duke, (in which number are included those ladies who are governantes to the young princesses of those families) and six ladies, either married or widows; the number of the last alone being limited.

All ladies who are admitted members, must exhibit and prove sixteen descents of uninterrupted and uncontaminated nobility. The nomination of the ladies, who are esteemed worthy of being invested with the order, and the days of ceremony, depend absolutely upon the will of the grand mistress.

In a will, made in 1778, the foundress of the order, her late most serene electoral highness Elizabeth Augusta, thought proper to nominate the serene princess Maria Amelia, then reigning duchess of Deux-Pont, and born princess of the Electoral House of Saxony, to be, after her death, her immediate successor, so far as regards the supreme government of the order; and that from a principle of the most singular affection, excited by the greatest esteem for the rare virtues, the goodness of heart, and the greatness of soul, of this excellent and incomparable princess.

On the 17th of August, 1794, upon the demise of the foundress, her highness, who became Duchess Dowager of Deux-Pont, succeeded to the administration; and having established her residence at Newburg, on the Danube, that city became the chief seat of this institution.

Statutes of the Order of Ladies, in Honour of St. Elizabeth, and for the Assistance of the Poor and Needy.

We, Elizabeth Augusta, Countess Palatine of the Rhine, &c. do hereby make known, that, from a motive of particular devotion towards St. Elizabeth, our patroness, we have been induced to establish an order of ladies, in honour of that saint, the principal object of which shall be, to afford help and assistance to the needy; and having obtained the consent of our most dear consort, the elector, to that effect, we have, therefore, established the said order, and have thought proper to ordain the following constitutions for its better maintenance and government.

First, This order shall be conferred only upon such ladies as profess the Catholic faith, and who are in a state of exhibiting and proving sixteen quarters of uninterrupted and unsullied nobility, as well on behalf of themselves as on that of their husbands, in case they are, or have been married.

Second, With an exception, so far as relates to Princesses of our Electoral House, and those of other ancient and princely families, this order is limited to the great mistress of our household, to the ladies of our court, especially attached to the service of our person, and to six ladies who are married, or in widowhood.

Third, No lady beyond this number shall be admitted.

Fourth, Easter-day, and the anniversary feast-day of St. Elizabeth, being the only days appropriated to, and destined for, the observance and performance of the ceremonies of reception, all the ladies companions must assist on those days at mass, and bestow alms according to the extent of their pecuniary ability.

Fifth, The distinctive badge of this order is, a cross pattée of white enamel; on the principal side, upon a field azure, is a representation of St. Elizabeth bestowing alms, the figures are enamelled proper. The reverse is distinguished by our cipher in gold, upon a field argent, and the same surrounded with three circles, that in the middle is green, and the two lateral circles and the contours of the cross are of burnished gold: the whole surmounted with an electoral crown.

Sixth, The ladies shall wear this cross attached to the left breast, and it shall be suspended from a blue ribbon, with a small border of red.

Seventh, No lady shall appear in public without this cross; and in case she does, she shall be fined one ducat, for each omission.

Eighth, Each lady of this order, upon her reception, shall pay the sum of four ducats to the treasury.

Ninth, Upon the demise of a lady, the cross must be transmitted to the treasurer; and all surviving ladies must cause two masses to be said for the soul of the departed. On our part, we, in the quality of foundress, will, in such cases, cause a solemn service of requiem to be sung, at which all the ladies companions then inhabiting the place of our residence, shall be obliged to attend personally.

Tenth, If a lady shall lose her cross, she must have a new one made at her own expense.

Eleventh, We reserve to ourselves for ever, not only the choice of the officers, that is to say, of the secretary and the treasurer, but also the care of giving them their respective instructions, &c.

Twelfth, Likewise, the power and the liberty to ameliorate, augment, and change, all and every these present constitutions, according as we shall think proper for the good and advancement of the order.

In witness whereof, we have signed the said constitutions, and have caused our electoral seal to be put thereto.

Given at Manheim, the 13th of October, 1766.

Elizabeth Augusta, Electress.

By a bull of Pope Clement XIII. bearing date the 31st of January, 1767, which was given to the intent that this order and its statutes might receive spiritual confirmation, permission was granted to the grand mistress, to assemble the ladies companions in such wise, that they shall assist at divine worship, and at such processions as may tend to the honour and glory of the faith, and to the edification of the faithful. His holiness likewise assures the ladies, especial indulgences on the days of their reception, on those of their deaths, on the anniversary feast-day of St. Elizabeth, and for all pious and devout works of charity and beneficence.

On account of political circumstances, the serene grand mistress having demanded the papal permission that the crosses to be distributed whensoever receptions take place, should not absolutely and indispensably be consecrated by the high-almoner of the order, or by a bishop, but in like manner, by any other ecclesiastic in priests' orders, on whom her choice might fall; on the 22nd of December, 1794, her highness obtained the same from Pope Pius VI.

Ceremonial of Reception observed when a lady is invested with the electoral order of St. Elizabeth.

The first reception took place at Manheim, 19th November, 1766, (being the anniversary feast-day of St. Elizabeth) at ten o'clock in the morning, in the great audience-chamber of the electress, who was seated under a magnificent canopy of state, the whole suit of her court being in waiting; and after causing the institution of the order, and the statutes, to be expounded by the secretary, she was pleased to confer the same in manner and form following.

The ladies named to be received on this occasion, or their proxies, successively advanced towards the electress, and on their knees, received from her hands the crosses, which, placed upon a large salver, were carried by the treasurer of the order to the great master of the household, and by him were presented, upon a small salver, to the grand mistress.

The ceremony terminated with a discourse of thanks, pronounced by the secretary.

On the 26th of April, 1787, the ceremonial of reception, as observed in the chapel of the Electoral Palace at Manheim, was attended with still more pomp. Her electoral highness the grand mistress being then seated under a rich and magnificent canopy of state, elevated near the high altar, distributed the crosses in manner above-mentioned; and during the ceremony, the hymn Te Deum laudamus, chanted by the Prince-Bishop of Worms, was accompanied by the band of music in the service of the elector.

Towards the commencement of the ceremony, the crosses had been consecrated by the prince-bishop; and, afterwards, in the presence of the whole court, his highness celebrated high mass, with the accustomed solemnities.

These ceremonials have been often observed, but, generally speaking, the receptions or investitures have taken place without any ceremonial, other than the simple nomination of the grand mistress, accompanied with the cross and ribbon, and the statutes of the order being sent to the ladies who are admitted. See Pl. 9, fig. 11, for the badge of the order, which is worn at the left breast, and is particularly described in the statutes before given.

ST. FERDINAND. This royal and military order was instituted 21st August, 1811, by the general assembly of the Cortes of the kingdom of Spain, and ceased with their authority, but was revived by King Ferdinand VII. as a reward for military merit. The king is sovereign grand master, and nominates the knights, who are divided into five classes. The first class is composed of the officers, from the rank of sub-lieutenant, to that of colonel, inclusive; the second is formed of officers of the same rank, who have particularly distinguished themselves in the service; the third are general officers; and the fourth are of the same rank, but must have performed some heroic action; and the fifth must have been commanders-in-chief, and more eminently distinguished for their services; the last are denominated grand crosses, and have the title of excellency. Sub-officers and soldiers, whose heroic actions would otherwise have entitled them to admission into the first class, are attached to the order as followers, or attendants upon it.

The knights who particularly distinguish themselves after admission, are rewarded with pensions, which, upon the third action, extend to their widows or fathers, if unmarried.

The knights of the first class wear a badge, composed of a gold cross of eight points, enamelled white; upon the centre of which is represented the king in his robes of state, crowned, holding in his right hand a mound, and in his left a sceptre, encircled with a fillet azure, bearing the motto, Al merito militar, in letters of gold, and which is suspended from the button-hole by a red ribbon, edged with orange-colour. See Pl. 9, fig. 15. Upon the centre, on the reverse of the badge, is inscribed, El rey y la patria.

The second class wear, in the same manner, a similar badge, but the cross is surrounded with an olive-crown, and surmounted with a wreath of laurel, by which it is suspended from a ribbon before described. See Pl. 9, fig. 19.

The third class wear the same badge as the first, but are likewise entitled to a star of gold, being a cross of eight points, with fleurs-de-lis between the principal angles; upon the centre is the king in his robes, encircled with the fillet and motto, as upon the middle of the badge, before described, and which star is worn upon the left breast of the outer garment. See Pl. 9, fig. 18.

The fourth class wear the badge of the second, with the star of the third, ornamented with a crown of laurel; and the fifth, or knights grand crosses, wear the same badge as the fourth, suspended from a broad ribbon, of the colours before described, scarfways over the right shoulder, together with the star, ornamented with the crown of laurel. Sub-officers and soldiers attached to the order wear the badge of the second class, in silver, pendent from the button-hole.

ST. FERDINAND, and OF MERIT, instituted 1 April, 1800, by Ferdinand IV. King of the two Sicilies, after his re-entrance into Naples, in testimony of his gratitude for divine protection, to recompense the services of his adherents, and to excite others of his Neapolitan subjects to similar acts of loyalty and fidelity.

By the statutes of the order, the number of the knights grand crosses was limited to twenty-four; and the immortal Nelson, who had safely conveyed the royal family of Naples to the more friendly shores of Sicily, when Bonaparte and his victorious army overran almost every state in Europe, was nominated one of the senior knights, together with Souwaroff, Rimnisky, Prince Italiaky, and the late Emperor of Russia, Paul I.; his Sicilian majesty, his two sons, all the ministers of state, and the chief nobles of the court, to the number of twenty-one, forming the first class, or knights grand crosses of the order.

The second class, or knights commanders, was unrestricted as to number; and the late Sir Thomas Trowbridge, and Sir Alexander John Ball, Baronets, Sir Samuel Hood, Sir Thomas Lewis, and Sir Benjamin Hallowell, then post-captains in the British navy, were invested with the badge of knights commanders; and his Britannic majesty granted these officers his royal permission to accept and wear the insignia of the order.

The badge is of gold, in the form of a star of six points, or rays, and between them fleurs-de-lis, all issuing from a centre of gold, whereon is depicted the image of St. Ferdinand, in his robes and crown, his right hand resting upon a drawn sword, and holding in his left a crown of laurel; all encircled with a blue fillet, bearing the motto, Pro fide et merito. The badge is surmounted by the crown, to the top of which is attached a ring, by which it is suspended from a dark blue ribbon, with a small red border or edge, and worn scarfways over the right shoulder by the grand crosses. See Pl. 10, fig. 1.

The knights grand crosses likewise wear, on the left breast of their upper garment a silver star, corresponding with the badge. See Pl. 10, fig. 2.

The second class, or knights commanders, wear the same badge as the grand crosses, but it is suspended by a narrower ribbon round the neck, and they are not entitled to wear the star.

In 1805, this and the other Neapolitan orders were abolished by Joseph Napoleon in Naples; but it continued to exist in Sicily, where the king and royal family had taken up their residence. In 1810, this order, which was at first composed of only two classes, as before mentioned, was augmented by a third, called knights, who wear a similar badge, rather smaller, suspended from the button-hole.

ST. GEORGE D' ALFAMA, a Spanish order, instituted in 1201. It was so named from a town in Tortosa, and approved by the Papal See in 1363; but in 1369 it was united to the order of Our Lady of Montesa.

ST. GEORGE, an Austrian order, instituted, according to Giustiniani Schoonebeck and other authors, by Randolph, Count of Hapsburg, the first emperor of the House of Austria, about 1273 or 1290; or, as other writers affirm, founded in 1470, by Frederick III. Emperor of Germany, to unite and encourage the nobility to defend the frontiers of his hereditary dominions against the then-frequently harassing invasions of the Turks.

The founder and his successors were entitled protectors of the order, who appointed a grand master for the government of it. Upon its first foundation, it was highly esteemed, and the knights were of great service; but in less than a century it began to decline; and, notwithstanding the endeavours of Maximilian, the Emperor, to revive and restore it to its original splendour, it was at length discontinued.

The badge was, a cross botonnée gules, the upper limb encircled with a ducal coronet or. It was worn pendent from a collar composed of triple chains of gold. See Pl. 9, fig. 12.

The seat of the order was at Mildstadt, in Carinthia, a rich Benedictine abbey, granted to the knights by Frederick III. upon the revival or foundation of the order by that monarch.

ST. GEORGE. This Bavarian order, called The Order of St. George, Defender of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was instituted at a very early period, as these knights were much esteemed, on account of the courage displayed by them in the tournaments of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. In 1487, the last tournament was held at Worms, and from that period, the order seems to have remained dormant, until the year 1729, when his Imperial Majesty Charles-Albert VII. Emperor of Germany, and Elector of Bavaria, renewed it in the third year of his reign, and his Holiness Pope Benedict XIII. solemnly confirmed the same: the revival of the order was celebrated at Murich with great pomp, in the collegiate and chapteral church, dedicated to the mother of our Redeemer. In 1778, this order was again revived by the Elector Charles-Theodore, and is now considered second in rank among the Bavarian orders.

This order is now divided into three classes, viz. grand crosses or grand commanders, commanders, and knights; and the members of the order, upon admission, are to prove their gentility for five generations, as well on the mother's as on the father's side: they are sworn to defend the Catholic religion, and the Immaculate Conception; and to take up arms at the command of the grand master.

The principal festivals are on the 23rd of April, (the feast of St. George) and the 8th of December, (the Conception.)

The badge of the order is, a sky-blue enamelled eight-pointed cross of gold, with a white border: in the centre is a circular compartment of gold, somewhat raised, whereupon is depicted the Virgin Mary, standing upon a crescent and serpent, in clouds, her hands extended, the head encircled with five stars; in the four principal angles of the cross are four small compartments of a lozenge-form of blue enamel, with a narrow border of white, and thereupon these letters, in gold, V. I. B. I. (meaning, Virginii Immaculatæ Bavaria Immaculata,) each point of the cross terminating with a small button or bead of gold. See Pl. 10, fig. 8. On the reverse of this badge, the cross is enamelled red, with a white border; on the centre is the figure of St. George on horseback, slaying the dragon; and upon the four compartments, which occupy the principal angles, are the four letters, J. U. P. F. for Justus ut palma florebit. See Pl. 10, fig. 11. This badge is suspended by a ring, pendent from the head of a lion of gold; and upon ordinary occasions, it is worn by the grand crosses pendent from a broad sky-blue-coloured watered ribbon, edged with two narrow stripes, the outer one white, the inner, dark blue, scarfways over the right shoulder. The commanders wear a smaller badge, suspended round the neck from a narrower gibbon; and the knights suspend a still smaller badge from a more narrow ribbon, from the button-hole. Upon particular festivals, the badge is suspended from a collar composed of three links, renewed alternately; the first being a rectangle of gold, upon which are the words, In fide, justitia, et fortitudine; on the sides of this rectangle are flames of gold, and on the two extremities are placed princely caps, in red enamel. The second link is formed by two lozenge-shaped compartments united together, alternately enamelled blue and white, the outside adorned with a rich foliage of gold. The third link consists of two lions rampant, of gold, double queued, upon a mount of the same metal, each supporting with one fore paw a pillar or column, surmounted with a globe, and holding with the other paw a scimitar, all gold. See Pl. 10, fig. 10.

The grand crosses of this order likewise wear upon the left side of their upper garments, a star composed of a blue cross of eight points, edged with silver, with quadrated compartments of blue and silver, chequerways, between the principal angles; upon a circular centre, the cross of St. George, gules, upon a field argent. See Pl. 10, fig. 7. The commanders wear the same star, but the knights do not wear the star.

The habit of the order consists, first, of a straight-coat, turned up with silver tissue; second, a ponceau-coloured velvet belt, embroidered with silver; third, a sky-blue-coloured velvet scapulary, with a rich border of silver, over which is worn the collar of the order; fourth, small-clothes of ponceau-coloured velvet; fifth, white kid shoes, with red heels, tied with roses of red and silver; sixth, mantle of sky-blue-coloured velvet, lined with silver tissue, and adorned with the star in embroidery; seventh, hat of black velvet, turned up in front, adorned with a rich diamond button and loop, the whole surrounded with plumes of red and white ostrich's feathers.

The reigning Elector of Bavaria is always grand master of this order; next to him are three grand priors; two of which dignitaries appertain to the electoral princes, and the third to the eldest of the princes of the younger branches of the Bavarian family; and in case there be none, it remains vacant.

The established number of grand crosses was six, and the grand chancellor was selected from amongst them. The commanders were limited to twelve, from whom were chosen the treasurer and master of the ceremonies. The knights were twenty-four in number; and from this class were nominated the secretary, cashier, and master of the ceremonies.

ST. GEORGE, in Burgundy, founded in 1400, by Philibert de Miolans, a gentleman of Burgundy, who pretended to have brought from the east some relics of St. George, which he deposited in a small chapel, built for their reception, near the parish church of Rougemont.

The badge was, St. George on horseback, overthrowing the dragon: it was borne pendent to a blue ribbon from the button-hole; and women, as well as men, were admitted into the order.

In 1485, the statutes were enlarged; and the members of the order vowed to assist in the deliverance of prisoners, and to protect widows and orphans. Previous to being admitted, it was necessary to prove sixteen descents of nobility.

Louis XIV. is said to have changed the colour of the ribbon of the order to blue, which, before that period, had been red.

So late as the year 1814, some persons have worn the insignia of this order, but which seems not to have been recognised by any authority.

ST. GEORGE, in England. See GARTER.

ST. GEORGE, in Genoa, instituted in 1472, by Frederick III. Emperor of Germany, who dedicated it to St. George, the titular saint and patron of Genoa, in proof of his attachment to that republic. The Doge of Venice is perpetual grand master.

The badge of the order is, a plain cross, enamelled gules, which is worn pendent to a gold chain or a ribbon, round the neck, and the like cross embroidered on the cloak. See Pl. 11, fig. 2.

ST. GEORGE, in Italy. See GOLDEN ANGEL, and ST. CONSTANTINE.

ST. GEORGE, in Ravenna, supposed to have been instituted in 1534, by Pope Paul III. who assigned the city of Ravenna for the residence of the knights, that they might the more readily defend that city, and the marches of Ancona, from the corsairs. The order was abolished by Pope Gregory, in 1572. The badge was, a star of eight points gules; over it, a ducal coronet or. See Pl. 11, fig. 1.

ST. GEORGE, in Rome. This order is, by some writers, said to have been instituted by Pope Alexander VI. about the year 1492 or 1498; and according to Michaeli, by Pope Paul III. to encourage naval men to defend the coast of the Adriatic against pirates. The collar was, a gold chain, and pendent thereto the figure of St. George on horseback, overthrowing the dragon, and piercing it with his lance, all enamelled in proper colours. The badge was a gold cross, within a circle of gold, like an open crown. See Pl. 11, fig. 3.

ST. GEORGE, in Russia, instituted by the late Empress Catharine II. in 1769, to reward the services of her military and naval officers.

The order is divided into four classes; the first class receive an annual pension of 700 roubles; the second, 400; and the third, 200. One hundred of the eldest members of the fourth class likewise receive an annual pension of 100 roubles each. The widow of a knight also receives the pension of her late husband, for one year after his demise. The knights of the two first classes have the rank of major-general; and those of the two last, that of colonel.

For admission into the first class, it is necessary, as a commander-in-chief, to have gained some great victory, and to have been in effective service twenty-five years; and naval men must have been eighteen years in the service.

No one can be admitted into the order without having previously taken a vessel, battery, or some post occupied by the enemy; or having sustained a siege without surrender; or having, at least, made some very extraordinary defence; or having gained, or contributed to gain, a victory; or having undertaken to execute some perilous enterprize; or having first mounted at an assault; or having first set foot upon an enemy's land, at the debarkation of troops.

This order has no grand master; two councils, the one composed of military, and the other of naval men, at the end of each campaign, prepare a list of officers who have a right of admission.

The order was not granted during the reign of Paul I. because that monarch had projected great alterations in its organization. The Emperor Alexander re-established it by a ukase of the 12th December, 1801.

The chapter of the order begged their sovereign to accept the insignia, as a testimony of their gratitude, which Alexander declined, until regularly qualified for admission; and he was not received into the fourth class, until after the campaign of 1805.

An addition may be considered to have been made to the order on the 13th of February, 1807, by the institution of crosses of St. George, for the purpose of rewarding inferior officers and soldiers, who may distinguish themselves by some brilliant action, and which cross is accompanied with one-third additional pay.

The badge is, a golden cross pattée, enamelled grey, with a small red border; upon the centre of which is a medallion, with the figure of St. George killing the dragon; and on the reverse, is an inscription and date, in Gracco Russian characters. See Pl. 10, fig. 4. It is worn pendent to a rich black and orange striped watered ribbon, in five stripes. The first class wear it scarfways over the right shoulder; and on the left breast of their outward garment, a star of silver rays, of a lozenge form; upon a circular centre gules, the cypher T. C. in golden letters, surrounded by a fillet azure, edged with gold, bearing an inscription in Gracco Russian characters, in letters of gold. See Pl. 10, fig. 5.

The second class wear the badge pendent from a narrower ribbon round the neck, and a star like those of the first class.

The third class wear, in the same manner, a badge somewhat smaller, and a ribbon somewhat narrower, than the second, but without any star.

The cross of silver given to inferior officers and soldiers, is represented in Pl. 10, fig. 3.

ST. GERION. The exact period of the institution of this Austrian order is uncertain. Some writers assert that it was founded in 1190, by Frederick Barbarossa; and others, that it was instituted by Frederick II. in 1228. It is said to have been composed of German gentlemen, engaged in the holy wars in Palestine, who observed the rule of St. Augustine, and chose for their patron St. Gerion, who, with three hundred and eighteen of his companions, suffered martyrdom at Cologne. The knights wore on the right breast of their habit, which was white, the badge of the order, viz. a cross patriarchal gules, upon three mounts vert. See Pl. 11, fig. 4.

ST. HENRY, of Saxony, instituted 7th of October, 1736, by Augustus III. King of Poland; but upon the death of the founder, in 1763, his son, the late elector, surviving only a few months, the order became dormant till the 4th of September, 1768, when his royal highness Prince Xavier of Saxony, (regent during the minority of Frederick-Augustus,) deemed it expedient to renew it as a reward for brave actions, and a proper recompense for officers who had served in the troops of the elector. It was divided into three classes, viz. grand crosses, commanders, and knights. The king is grand master; and the princes of the royal family are knights by birth.

The badge upon its foundation, was, a red enamelled cross pattée; on the centre of which was the portrait or effigy of the Emperor Henry II. surrounded with the words, Sanctus Henricus Imperator; and upon each of the four branches of the cross, was his majesty's cipher, A. III. R. in gold letters; and between the four principal angles of the cross, were as many white eagles of Poland. On the centre of the reverse, were these words, Pictate et Bellica Virtute. Upon each of the branches of the cross, were disposed the swords of Saxony, placed cross-ways, on an escutcheon of pretence, per fesse, sable and argent; being the arms borne by the elector, as hereditary arch-marshal of the Holy Roman Empire. This badge was suspended from a columbine-red ribbon, edged with a narrow border of silver.

The badge was altered, upon its revival, to an eight-pointed cross of gold, edged with white enamel, the four principal angles having green branches and garlands of rue, (the ancient devices of the Electoral House of Saxony;) upon the centre, which is circular, and of gold, or yellow enamel, is the pedestrian figure of the Emperor St. Henry, completely armed, and decorated with the ornaments and attributes of the imperial dignity, encircled with a blue fillet, edged with gold, upon which is inscribed in golden letters, Xaverius Princ. Polon. Dux et Administrator Saxonie instituit 1768. On the centre of the reverse, per fesse, sable and argent, two swords, saltierways, surrounded with a crown of laurel; which arms are encircled with a fillet azure, and upon which is inscribed the motto of the order, Virtuti in Bello. This badge is surmounted with the regal crown, from the top of which it is suspended by a ring from a blue ribbon, edged with yellow. See Pl. 10, fig. 9.

The badge is borne, by the grand crosses, scarfways, over the right shoulder, pendent on the left side, together with a silver star of eight points, upon the centre of which is the figure of St. Henry, encircled with the fillet and inscription described in the badge. See Pl. 10, fig. 6. The commanders wear the badge in the same manner as the grand crosses, but without the star; and the knights wear the badge at the button-hole, with a rosette.

ST. HERMENEGILDE, founded by Ferdinand VII. King of Spain, 28th November, 1814, to reward the services of military and naval officers.

The king is grand master; and the order is divided into three classes. All captains-general are, by virtue of such rank, grand crosses; and general officers, who have served forty years, compose the first class, and have the title of Excellency.

The second class is composed of officers of the rank of brigadier, and under it, who have likewise been in the service forty years. The third, or last class, must have served twenty-five years, and for ten of which they must have held the rank of officers. But the king can nominate for especial acts of heroism, and dispense with the regular time of service.

After having been ten years members of the order, and still in effective service, they enjoy the following pensions: grand crosses, ten thousand reals; the second class, four thousand eight hundred reals; and the third class, two thousand four hundred reals.

A chapter of the order is assembled annually by the grand master, or, in his absence, by the captain-general of the province.

The badge of the order is, a cross pattée of gold, enamelled white; upon a circular centre azure, is an equestrian figure of St. Hermenegilde, or, encircled with a blue fillet, inscribed with the words, A la constancia Militar premio. The cross is surmounted by the crown, from the top of which it is suspended by a ring from a red ribbon, edged with white. See Pl. 10, fig. 12.

The grand crosses wear the badge scarfways, together with a star formed of a golden Maltese cross of eight points, with rays of silver between the principal angles; upon the centre, is the figure of the saint, encircled with the fillet and inscription, which is surrounded with a chaplet of laurel. See Pl. 10, fig. 13.

The second class wear the like star and badge, the latter suspended round the neck; and the third class wear the badge from the button-hole, but are not entitled to the star.

ST. HUBERT. See CHASE.

ST. HUBERT, an order of the duchy of Juliers, instituted in 1444, or 1447, by Gerard V. Duke of Juliers, Berg, and Cleves, to commemorate a signal victory, gained by him over Arnold of Egmont, on the feast-day of St. Hubert, from which the order derived its appellation. Some writers affirm, however, that it was instituted in honour of St. Hubert, Bishop of Liege. It has also been styled the Order of the Horn; as the knights formerly wore a hunting-horn suspended from a chain, as the peculiar and distinctive badge of the order.

The order continued to flourish till the year 1609, when the family of the founder became extinct in the male line; and, the duchies being claimed by the Elector Palatine and the Elector of Brandenburg, were put into sequestration by the emperor, which, amongst other things, was one of the causes of a war of nearly thirty years continuance; during which time the order was greatly neglected and almost forgotten.

In 1709, it was revived by John, or Philip-William, Elector-Palatine of the Rhine, who declared himself grand master, and a new code of statutes were digested for its better government, by which it was enacted, that the number of counts and barons who enjoy the feudal rights of the domains appertaining to the order, shall not exceed twelve; but that the number of princes and private gentlemen shall not be limited. Every person, without exception, on whom this order is conferred, is obliged to exhibit proofs of sixteen generations of nobility, by paternal and maternal descent; and when invested therewith, must make a free gift of one hundred ducats, ad pios uses.

The elector, on the arrival of the order, bestowed on those knights who were not distinguished by princely rank, commanderies in commendam; but to those princes invested with this order, were appropriated the title of chief of an electoral region, and the annual emoluments arising from it.

The Elector-Palatine of the Rhine is grand master of the order; but the knights are elected by the chapter, which is held in his presence. All the knights have either military employments or pensions.

The badge of the order is, an eight-pointed enamelled cross, with golden beads at each extremity, and rays of gold issuing from the principal angles; in the middle is a circular shield or, upon which is a tuft of trees in green enamel, out of which appears the fore-part of a deer, bearing a red cross between his antlers; opposite to the deer, is the figure of St. Hubert, kneeling, with a glory round his head, and a dog, horse, and man standing by him; the whole encircled with a fillet of red enamel, bearing the motto of the order, in old Teutonic golden characters, In Trau Vast, i. e. Be firm in fidelity. See Pl. 12, fig. 7. This badge the knights are obliged to wear constantly; and upon ordinary occasions, it is suspended from a broad rich ponceau-coloured watered ribbon, with a narrow border of dark green, scarfways over the left shoulder; but upon particular festivals and ceremonies, the badge is suspended from a collar composed of old text Œ's, enamelled red, from which flames of gold are issuant, and oblong plates of gold, enamelled white, upon which is depicted St. Hubert kneeling to the stag, with the cross between the antlers, issuant from trees, and a dog, horse, and man standing near. See Pl. 12, fig. 2.

The knights also wear, on the left side of their outer garment, a silver star of eight points, somewhat of an octagon form; upon which is a cross pattée, extending nearly to the extremities, embroidered in silver, embellished and edged with burnished gold, the points adorned with golden beads; in the middle of the cross is a circular piece of ponceau-coloured velvet, edged with gold, with the motto, Constans in fidelitate, in the Runio language, in golden letters. See Pl. 12, fig. 4.

The dress of ceremony consists of a vest of white satin, with long white hose; and above the whole is worn a short mantle of black velvet, lined with black silk, upon which is embroidered the star before described. The dress is made after the ancient Spanish fashion.

ST. HUBERT, of Lorraine and of Bar. This order, which is but little known, is said to have had its origin from several seigneurs of the duchy of Bar, having, in May, 1416, united themselves together, and raised troops in defence of their sovereign. This association was at first called the Order of Fidelity, and was to have continued only five years; but, at a chapter held in 1423, it was decided that it should continue, under the appellation of St. Hubert, as the patron saint.

Proof of nobility was necessary for admission; and it appears that Louis XIV. XV. and XVI. all granted certain privileges of this order.

During the French Revolution, the chief seat of the order was established at Frankfort-sur-le-Mein. In 1815, it was re-organized conformably to its statutes; and in 1816, his majesty Louis XVIII. acknowledged the order.

The order is composed of a grand master, six grand crosses, thirty commanders, and an indefinite number of knights, who, upon reception, pay a considerable fee. They swear to live in the Catholic faith, and to take up arms under the grand master, when required by the king.

The badge of the order is, a cross pattée gold, rounded at the points, enamelled white; upon a circular centre azure, edged with gold, is represented the figure of St. Hubert kneeling to a stag, with a red cross between the antlers, his horse standing behind him. Upon the centre, on the reverse, are the following arms: azure, two dolphins endorsed, contrary embowed, between four crosses patriarchal, or, which is surrounded with a blue fillet, inscribed, A·N·S·H·A·B·B·A·R·R·E·N·I·N·S·A·N·1416. See Pl. 11, fig. 10. It is suspended from a broad blue ribbon, edged with red, worn scarfways from right to left, by the grand crosses; and by the commanders, round the neck; the knights wearing it suspended from the button-hole, by a narrow ribbon. Upon certain festivals or ceremonial days, the grand crosses suspend this badge from a collar, composed of the united letters S·H. often repeated, linked together by a chain of gold. See Pl. 11, fig. 11.

The grand crosses and commanders likewise wear, on the left side, a silver star, formed of a cross pattée, edged with gold, the points adorned with golden beads, rays issuant between the principal angles, and from the upper and lower limb of the cross; upon a circular centre is represented St. Hubert kneeling to the stag, with a red cross between the antlers, and a horse standing behind him; the whole encircled with a blue fillet, edged with gold, inscribed with the motto, Virtus et honor, in golden letters. See Pl. 11, fig. 12.

ST. ISABEL, of Portugal, an order of ladies, instituted in 1704, by the reigning queen, by authority of the king. The queen is grand mistress, who confers it only upon ladies of the highest rank in that kingdom. The badge is, a medal, representing thereon an image of St. Isabel, Queen of Portugal, suspended from a pale rose-coloured ribbon, worn scarfways.

ST. JAMES, of France, instituted in the fifteenth century, for the service of the Hospital of Lacques; but Louis XIV. in 1672, re-established the Hospital of St. James at Paris, and united the possessions of this order to those of the orders of St. Lazarus. The badge was, a plain red cross tay, fitchée, the extremities of the arms somewhat concaved. See Pl. 11, fig. 15.

ST. JAMES, in Holland, instituted in 1290, by Florentius, Earl of Holland and Zealand, at his palace of the Hague, in honour of St. James. He created twelve of his princibles knights of this order, whom he invested with collars of gold chains, wherein, at equal distances, were placed six scallop-shells, to which was pendent a medal of gold, with the image of St. James enamelled thereon. See Pl. 12, fig. 12. The order was abolished with the Roman Catholic religion in Holland.

ST. JAMES OF THE SWORD, in Portugal. This order, by some authors, is said to have been instituted in 1310, by Denys VI. King of Portugal, in honour of St. James; but it may rather be considered to be a branch of the order of the same name in Spain, observing the same rules and regulations.

John III. King of Portugal, annexed the grand mastership to the crown of that kingdom. The order is divided into three classes, viz. grand crosses, only six in number; commanders, of whom there are one hundred and fifty; and knights, of an indefinite number.

In 1789, this order was secularized, and became an order of civil merit. The badge of the order is similar to that of Spain, but without the scallop-shell, yet, like the other orders of Portugal, it is pendent from a heart gules, issuing flames or. It is borne by the grand crosses from a broad violet-coloured ribbon, scarfways over the right shoulder; and by the commanders, round the neck; the knights wearing it from the button-hole; and without the heart, by the two first classes. See Pl. 11, fig. 16. The grand crosses and commanders likewise wear, on the left side of their habit, a star, similar to the Order of Christ.

ST. JAMES OF THE SWORD, in Spain. See JAGO SAN, DI COMPOSTILLA.

ST. JANUARIUS, of Naples, instituted in July, 1738, by Charles, King of Naples, and the two Sicilies, afterwards Charles III. King of Spain, who extended the number of knights to sixty; though, by the statutes of the order, they were not to exceed thirty. The number is now indefinite.

The founder was to remain sovereign grand master so long as he lived, and upon his demise, that dignity was to be enjoyed by the King of Naples, and his successors. The knights, upon admission, are to prove the nobility of their ancestors for four centuries. They are addressed by the title of Excellency.

The badge is, an eight-pointed white enamelled cross of gold, with fleurs-de-lis between the principal angles; upon the centre, is the figure of St. Januarius, in his episcopal robes, as patron of the order, holding in the left hand an open book and crozier; below his waist is the motto, In sanguine fedus; on the reverse is a book, upon which are two phials red, surrounded with two palms, all enamelled in proper colours. See Pl. 14, fig. 7. This badge is suspended from a broad rich ponceau-coloured watered ribbon, worn scarfways over the right shoulder. They likewise wear, upon the left breast of their upper garment, an embroidered silver star of eight points, formed like the badge, with gold fleurs-de-lis between the principal angles; upon the centre is represented St. Januarius, as before described, encircled with a blue fillet, upon which is inscribed, in letters of gold, the motto, In sanguine fœdus. See Pl. 14, fig. 5.

Upon great festivals or ceremonial days, the knights wear a mantle of crimson and mohair, bestrewed with fleurs-de-lis in gold embroidery. This mantle is lined with pearl-coloured taffeta, richly beset with black spots, after the manner of ermine. On each side hang down rich tassels of gold and silver. The hat is of black velvet, adorned with a white feather. The dress worn with this mantle is, a coat and vest of cloth of silver, or white and silver tissue; and the star is embroidered on both coat and mantle. The badge is thus worn pendent from a collar of gold, composed of castles, banners, mitres, roses, &c. See Pl. 14, fig. 6.

ST. JOACHIM. This equestrian, secular, and chapteral order was instituted 20th June, 1756, by several princes and nobles in Germany, and was at first called the Order of Jonathan, Defenders of the Honour of Divine Providence; but in 1767, the name of Jonathan was suppressed, and instead of being styled defenders, the order was then said to be, In honour of the Divine Providence, but which was not confirmed till 1773.

His serene highness Christian-Francis, Duke of Saxe-Cobourg-Saalfeld, was the first grand master, who was elected and installed 20th of June, 1756, the first anniversary of the foundation. He resigned the grand mastership in 1773, and Francis-Xavier, reigning Comte, was elected by the general chapter to succeed to that office. He died suddenly, 20th March, 1780, and George Charles Louis, reigning Comte of Leiningen Westerbourg, was elected grand master, who dying 19th March, 1787, Charles Gustavus, his son, the next reigning comte, elected coadjutor, 4th November, 1784, succeeded to the grand mastership 16th May, 1787.

In 1785, by a decree of general chapter, the order was denominated, The Equestrian, Secular, and Chapteral order of St. Joachim, the blessed Father of the Holy Virgin Mary, the Mother of our Lord and Redeemer, Jesus Christ.

By the statutes of the order, both sexes are admitted, and the number is unlimited. It is composed of grand commanders, commanders, knights immediate, or junior knights, and expectants; ladies grand crosses, ladies wearing the small cross, and ladies expectant.

The badge of the knights, commanders, and grand commanders, is, a gold cross of eight points, enamelled white; upon a circular centre, surrounded with a laurel crown, is the figure of St. Joachim, in a green vest, with a white sash round the body, and from the left shoulder is suspended a scrip; on his head a green cap of oriental fashion, and in his left hand a shepherd's crook; upon the reverse of the centre, a cross pattée vert. See Pl. 10, fig. 16. This badge is surmounted by a knight's helmet, and by a ring at the top, both of gold, suspended from a dark green-coloured watered ribbon. It is worn by the grand master scarfways over the right shoulder; and by the secular grand commanders in the same way; but the ecclesiastical grand commanders suspend it round the neck.

The badge worn by the commanders and knights, is somewhat smaller, suspended from the neck; but the grand commanders, commanders, and knights, excepting upon days of ceremony, may all of them wear merely the badge or cross of a knight only, pendent from a ribbon, attached from the second to the third button-hole.

The grand master and grand commanders also wear, upon the left breast of their outer garment, a silver embroidered star, or cross of eight points, formed like the badge; upon a circular centre of white satin, a cross pattée vert, surrounded with a fillet of dark green velvet, inscribed with the motto, Junxit amicus amor, 1756, (the date of creation,) in letters and figures of gold; which fillet is encircled with a laurel crown. See Pl. 10, fig. 14.

The commanders wear the same kind of star, but somewhat smaller.

The ecclesiastical and secular grand commanders, whether possessed of a commandery or not, are at liberty to wear the decorations of a knight or commander, at their pleasure.

The expectants wear only the ribbon passed from the second to the third button-hole of their coats, formed into a knot, upon which is embroidered, in silver, the words, Crescam ut proxim.

The habit worn by the grand master, and the other members of the order, consists of a waistcoat and small-clothes of superfine white cloth; the coat is of scarlet cloth, lined with white, with cuffs and collar of dark green velvet, the buttons white, with a cross pattée vert engraved thereon.

The coat has two silver embroidered epaulets, with a green cross pattée. The grand master has four such crosses upon each epaulet; the grand commanders, three; the commanders, two; and the knights, one. The sword is decorated with a knot of green and silver. The grand master wears his hat bordered with a point d'Espagne of silver, and adorned with a white feather. The expectants wear the same uniform, but the epaulets are not ornamented with the green cross.

There is likewise a class of honorary members attached to this order, into which persons in civil capacities, distinguished for merit and learning, are admitted; but they are not advanced to the dignity of knight commanders, or grand commanders, nor obtain commanderies. These members wear a cross, nearly similar to that worn by the knights; it is only half an inch in length, and worn at the button-hole of the waistcoat, pendent from a ribbon: it is not surmounted with the helmet; and has no laurel crown round the circular part, which is merely bordered with green, bearing on one side the inscription, Nobili, and upon the other, Cordi.

Ladies are likewise admitted into this order, and are divided into three classes, viz. ladies grand crosses, ladies wearing the small cross, and ladies novices, to whom are assigned the same insignia as those worn by the knights, with the exception, that instead of the golden helmet, the cross is surmounted with a death's head, placed upon the cross bones in gold.

The ladies grand crosses wear the cross attached to a ribbon round the neck, of the same colour as that worn by the knights; and upon the left breast wear a silver star, like the grand commanders. The ladies wearing the small cross, attach it to a narrower ribbon, with a knot and loop, at the left breast; and the ladies novices wear upon the left breast a knot of ribbon, upon which is embroidered, in silver, the word, Virtuti. Upon particular festivals, or days of ceremony, the married ladies or widows must be dressed in black silk, and the unmarried ladies in white.

There are likewise ladies attached to this branch of the order, called the class of honorary relatives of the order; but into which no unmarried lady can be received. ST. JOHN, of Acre, in Palestine. These knights resided in the city of Acre, where they performed acts of charity to pilgrims travelling to the Holy Land. Their exercise of arms was similar to the knights hospitalers, and following the rule of St. Augustine, wore a black garment, with a white cross pattée thereon. After the city of Acre was taken, they removed into Spain, where they flourished, receiving great favour from Alphonsus, the astrologer, King of Castile; but after his death they decayed, and were united to the knights hospitalers.

ST. JULIAN. See ALCANTARA.

ST. LAZARUS, or OUR LADY OF MOUNT CARMEL.

This military order is said to have arisen from the association of a number of knights, for the support, maintenance, and protection of poor lepers, in lazars and hospitals, set apart for their reception, particularly in the Holy Land. These knights likewise took under their protection, pilgrims resorting to Jerusalem.

The first formation of this order is, by some writers, said to have been so early as the latter end of the fourth century; but, with more probability, fixed by others about the year 1119.

These knights, being driven out of the Holy Land in 1253, followed St. Louis into France; who, in return for their services in the east, confirmed the donations made to them by his predecessors, and placed them in possession of several houses, commanderies, and hospitals, which he had built, and endowed with ample privileges and revenues; and procured from Pope Alexander IV. permission for them to observe the rule of St. Augustine.

In 1490, Pope Innocent VIII. suppressed this order, and united them to the order of St. John of Jerusalem; but the bull issued for that purpose was not received in France. In 1572, Pope Gregory XII. united those of this order in Italy, with that of St. Maurice, then newly instituted by Emanuel-Philibert, Duke of Savoy. And in 1608, this order was united in France to that of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, which had been instituted by Henry IV. The knights of St. Lazarus, and those of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, are allowed to marry, and, at the same time, to possess pensions charged upon ecclesiastical livings.

The badge of this order is, a cross, like that of Malta, of eight points, made of gold, edged with white enamel; and upon a circular centre, is the image of the Virgin and Child, proper. On the reverse, is a representation of St. Lazarus. Between the rays of the cross, are four fleurs-de-lis; and on each of the points, a small gold ball. See OUR LADY OF MOUNT CARMEL, and ST. MAURICE.

ST. LOUIS, of France. This royal and military order was founded, in the month of April, 1693, by Louis XIV. to recompense, by a particular distinction, the services of the officers of his army. It was confirmed by Louis XV. in 1719. For admission into this order, it was requisite to have served, as officers, twenty-eight years, and to have achieved some heroic action.

Each knight was sworn to live and die in the Catholic religion; to be faithful to the king, and those in command under him; to defend the honour of the sovereign, his rights, and those of the crown; never to quit the service of the king, or go into that of any foreign prince, without permission; to reveal every thing that may come to his knowledge against his person or state; strictly to observe the statutes of the order, and to bear himself as becomes a good, wise, and loyal knight.

The king is grand master; and the order is divided into grand crosses, commanders, and knights. The number of grand crosses, upon its first institution, was limited to twelve, the commanders to twenty-four, and the knights left indefinite; but the number of grand crosses and commanders have since been augmented.

By royal ordonnance, 30th May, 1816, the keeper of the seals of the kingdom is to fill the office of chancellor of the order.

The administration is confided to the secretary of state for the war department. In all public ceremonies, the knights of this order rank in equality with the members of the Legion of Honour, that is to say, the grand crosses of each together; the commanders with the grand officers; the knights after the commanders of the Legion of Honour, but with the officers of that order, and before the knights of it.

The badge is, an eight-pointed cross of gold, with a white enamelled border, beads at the points, and four fleurs-de-lis of gold between the principal angles: in the middle is a circular shield gules, with the effigy of St. Louis, in gold armour, with a royal mantle, holding in his right hand a crown of laurel, and in his left, one of thorns: the shield is encircled with a blue fillet, inscribed, Ludov. Mag. Inst. 1693, in gold letters. On the centre of the reverse, is a similar shield, charged with a drawn sword, erect, passing through a crown of laurel, tied to the bottom with white ribbons. This device is surrounded with a fillet azure, upon which is the motto, Bellica virtutis premium, in letters of gold. See Pl. 10, fig. 16. This badge is suspended by a ring, from a broad flame-coloured watered ribbon, and worn by the grand crosses and commanders scarfways from right to left: the knights suspend it from the button-hole, with a rosette of red ribbon.

The grand crosses likewise wear an embroidered star of gold, in every respect formed like the badge. See Pl. 10, fig. 17.

ST. MARK, of Venice. This order is said to have been instituted in 787, when the body of St. Mark was brought from Alexandria to Venice. The knights who were honoured with this order, enjoyed all the rights of patricians and free citizens. It became of great esteem; and the reigning doge was grand master.

The badge was, a medallion of gold, richly chased, with a winged lion, sejant, the wings elevated, holding in the sinister paw a sword erect, the dexter resting upon an open book, thereon the words, Pax tibi, Marce, Evangelista meus; being the arms of the Republic of Venice: on the reverse, the portrait of the reigning doge, with the image of St. Mark delivering a standard to him. See Pl. 11, fig. 5. It was worn pendent at the breast, from a gold chain. The habit of the order was, an ample black robe, with long sleeves, such as was usually worn by the nobility of the republic.

The order was never conferred upon any one who had not done great services to the republic; and those invested with it, bore upon their own paternal coat an escutcheon of pretence or, charged with a winged lion gules, and surrounded the shield with a fillet, bearing the motto, Pax, tibi, Marce, Evangelista meus.

The ceremony of creating these knights was much the same as knights bachelors, being dubbed with a sword, and their title a mark of honour only, having no revenue assigned to them; nor were they under any particular obligations or vows, like many other orders of knighthood.

The honour was conferred by the doge and by the senate: absent persons were invested by letters patent, and styled Knights of St. Mark.

ST. MARY, or DES FRÈRES DE LA JUBILATION, in Italy, founded by Bartholomew, Bishop of Vicenza, in 1233, to arrest the disorders of the Guelphes and the Gibelins, and to support the interests of religion and the state. This religious and military order followed the rules of St. Augustine, and possessed rich commanderies in Italy. The knights became prodigal of their fortunes, relaxed in their duties, and led such dissolute lives, that they acquired the appellation of Frères Guadentes. The order was abolished upon the death of Camille Volta. The badge was, an eight-pointed cross, enamelled blue; and upon an oval centre, rayonnée, of gold, the figure of the Virgin and Child. See Pl. 10, fig. 19.

ST. MARY THE GLORIOUS, an order proposed by John-Baptist Pedro and Bernardo-Petigna to Pope Paul V. who approved of it in 1618. Its object was the suppression of the Barbary corsairs infesting the Mediterranean; and in order to enable the knights to effect it more speedily, the pope gave them the command of his galleys, assigned to them the town and harbour of Civita Vecchia, and bestowed upon them the palace and convent of St. John of Lateran.

The badge, which was worn upon the left side of their mantles, was a cross sory of blue satin, embroidered with silver, and bordered with gold, having in the middle the letters SM, interlaced, ensigned with a celestial crown, and encircled with a fillet, inscribed In hoc signo vincam: between the principal angles of the cross, twelve rays, in allusion to the twelve apostles: and upon each arm a star, for the four evangelists. See Pl. 10, fig. 18.

ST. MAURICE, in Savoy, instituted by Amadeus VIII. Comte of Savoy, in whose favour that state was erected into a duchy. Being disgusted with the world, after the death of his consort, Mary of Burgundy, he retired to Ripaille, where he formed the design of founding a knightly confraternity, and becoming the superior, or grand master, and choosing six gentlemen of his own age, who had borne part in most of the important affairs of the state, he created them knights of this order.

The place destined for their retreat, was to be a hermitage, which he had resolved to build at Ripaille, near the hermits of St. Augustine, who were to be their spiritual directors; and St. Maurice being the patron of Savoy, he ordained that the order should bear his name.

The habit was a long robe of grey cloth, with a hood of the same, similar to the dress of the ancient hermits. The girdle was of gold, and the cap, and sleeves of the cassock were of red camlet; upon the mantle was a cross pommétée of white taffeta; and from the neck was suspended a gold cross botonée, as the badge of the order. The knights were at first limited to six, and a dean, who had their separate lodgings, and each apartment had a tower, that of the dean being more elevated than the rest. They were to suffer their hair and beards to grow long, and to carry a knotted staff of a twisted form, such as pilgrims were wont to use. One day of the week was devoted to solitude, and the rest to state affairs; and the knights were obliged to observe the rule of chastity.

The houses being built, and the revenues provided (which amounted only to two hundred florins of gold for each knight, and six hundred for the dean) the duke resigned the government of his states to his son Prince Louis, and retiring to his pavilion, accompanied by his six knights, the next day, in the church of his convent of Ripaille, he, together with them, took the habit of a hermit from the hands of the prior. This prince, some years afterwards, when the Fathers of the Council of Basil had deposed Eugenius IV. was elected pope, by the name of Felix V. The order became nearly extinct, but was revived in 1572, by Duke Philibert Emanuel, who obtained from Pope Gregory XIII. the incorporation of the order St. Lazarus, of which he was grand master, with that of St. Maurice. Upon which union, the crosses of each were blended together, and the badge, formed of a cross pommétée argent, upon a cross of eight points vert, equally disposed in the four angles; and when Victor Amadeus became King of the two Sicilies, the badge was surmounted by a regal diadem, from the top of which it is suspended by a ring. See Pl. 11, fig. 17.

The order was abolished during the re-union of Savoy with France; but it is now a civil and military order, composed of two classes, viz. grand crosses and knights; and for admission, proof must be made of ten descents of nobility; and before obtaining the rank of grand cross, it is necessary to be a knight. The members of the order take an oath of obedience to the grand master, and of chastity. The badge is attached to a green ribbon, and worn by the grand crosses round the neck; and by the knights from the button-hole.

The officers are, a grand conservator, grand hospitaler, anditor, secretary, fiscal, and herald of arms.

The mantles of ceremony are, a carnation-coloured taffeta, trimmed with tufts of green and white silk, and the lining is also white. The knights likewise wear a cassock of carnation-coloured damask, upon the front and back of which are embroidered, the united crosses of both orders; but the general uniform is green.

ST. MICHAEL, an order of France, instituted at Amboise, in 1489, by Louis XI. At the foundation, the king was grand master, and the number of knights thirty-six. It was held in estimation for about a century, but fell into disrepute, from the easy way in which it was acquired, in the reigns of Charles IX. and Henry III. In 1665, Louis XIV. fixed the number of knights at one hundred; and at present the order of St. Michael is generally given to subjects of France, distinguished for literature, arts, and sciences, and for inventions and discoveries useful to the state. By ordonnance of the 16th November, 1816, persons desirous of obtaining this order are to apply to the minister of the royal household, who makes his report to the king of such as are eligible for admission.

The badge is, an eight-pointed cross, with balls upon the extremities, and a fleur-de-lis between each of the principal angles, all of gold, the limbs of the cross bordered with white enamel; upon an oval centre azure, is St. Michael trampling on the dragon. See Pl. 11, fig. 19. The badge is suspended by a ring from a black watered ribbon, and worn scarfways from right to left; but it is generally attached to the button-hole on the left side of the habit.

There is also a grand collar, which is worn on particular occasions, composed of scallop-shells, connected or linked together with round cords of gold, twisted in a peculiar manner; and to which collar is suspended a medallion of the same metal, upon which is represented, in enamel, St. Michael trampling upon the dragon. See Pl. 11, fig. 20.

The mantle was of white damask, bordered all round with embroidery in gold and colours, representing the collar of the order, and lined with ermine. The chapeiron was of crimson velvet, embroidered like the mantle, under which the knights wore a short coat of crimson velvet.

The King of France is still grand master of this order, but from the little consideration in which it is held, he never officiates as such in person, but deposes some nobleman, who is a knight of the Holy Ghost, to act as his representative.

ST. MICHAEL, of Bavaria, instituted in 1693, by James-Clement, Duke of Bavaria, and Elector of Cologne. In 1777, the Elector Charles-Theodore named his nephew, Charles, Duke of Deux-Pont, grand master. King Maximilian Joseph confirmed this order in 1812. The king is chief, and the grand master a prince of Bavaria.

The order is composed of grand crosses, (who form the chapter) officers, knights, and honorary knights. To obtain the three first classes, it is necessary to prove nobility. The members of the order assemble annually in the church of St. Michael, at Munich.

The badge is, a golden cross pattée, enamelled blue, with flames and lightning, in gold, issuant between the principal angles; upon a circular centre, is St. Michael trampling upon the dragon; over the cross is an archducal crown, from the top of which it is suspended by a ring, from a broad blue watered ribbon. See Pl. 12, fig. 4. It is worn scarfways from right to left by the grand crosses. The officers suspend it from the neck; and the knights from the button-hole. The grand crosses also wear, on the left side, a star of gold, formed like the badge, the limbs of the cross chequy; and upon the centre, which is circular, the words, Quis ut Deus. See Pl. 12, fig. 1.

ST. MICHAEL, in Germany, an Austrian order, instituted at Mantua in 1618, and in the following year received at Vienna. It was confirmed by Pope Urban VIII. in 1624, but it soon fell into disuse. The badge, or ensign was, a cross of eight points, embroidered with blue silk and gold on the left side of the mantle: in the middle of it was the figure of the Virgin Mary, with Christ on her left arm, and a sceptre in her right hand, crowned with twelve stars, surrounded with rays of the sun, and a crescent under her feet. See Pl. 14, fig. 13.

ST. MICHAEL and ST. GEORGE, of the Ionian Islands, instituted by his present majesty George IV. of England, when prince regent, 27th April, 1818, by letters patent, under the great seal of the United States of the Ionian Islands and for Malta.

Extracts from the Statutes of the Order.

1. The sovereign of Great Britain and Ireland, being the protector of the United States of the Ionian Islands, Sovereign of Malta, &c. is sovereign of the most distinguished order of St. Michael and St. George.

2. That the lord high commissioner of the United States of the Ionian Islands is grand master of the said order for the time being.

3. That the order shall consist of three classes: first, knights grand crosses, to consist of eight, including the grand master; second, knights commanders, to consist of twelve; third, knights, to consist of twenty-four.

4. That every person, to be admitted a member of this order, must be born in the said United States of the Ionian Islands, or in the Island of Malta, or its dependencies, of noble birth, or distinguished for great merit, virtue, or loyalty. It is, however, reserved to his majesty to nominate born subjects of Great Britain and Ireland, who may not have been born in the Island of Malta, but who shall have held situations of the highest trust in the states of the Ionian Islands, or in the Island of Malta, or who shall have been employed in his majesty's naval or military service in the Mediterranean.

5. The naval commander-in-chief, in the Mediterranean, for the time being, first and principal grand cross of this order.

The star is formed of silver rays, every sixth and eighth being double, and somewhat longer than the others, with a single one of gold between them, the five intermediate rays shortening towards the middle one. This star is surmounted by a large red cross of St. George, extending nearly to the extremities, edged with gold; upon the centre of which, in a circular compartment, is the figure of St. Michael overcoming and trampling upon Satan, holding in his right hand a flaming sword, and chains in his left, by which the fiend lies bound beneath the angel's feet, all in proper colours: around the device is a blue fillet, edged with and having an outer ornamental border of gold, upon which is inscribed, in letters of the same metal, Auspicium melioris Aevi. See Pl. 13, fig. 2 and 3; Badge, Pl. 13, fig. 1; and Collar, Pl. 13, fig. 6.

ST. NICHOLAS, a Neapolitan order, founded in 1382, by Charles III. King of Naples, at the coronation of his wife Margaret. It was also called the order of the Ship, or Argonauts of St. Nicholas. The number of knights was limited to three hundred; but the order was abolished in 1386, at the death of the founder, who had not provided any revenue for its support.

The badge of the order was, a ship in a storm, with the motto, Non credo tempori. The habit was a white garment; and the grand feast was held in the convent of the church built by St. Nicholas, Bishop of Smyrna.

ST. PATRICK. This most illustrious order was instituted by his late majesty George III. King of Great Britain, 6th February, 1783. It is composed of the sovereign, a grand master, a prince of the blood royal, and fifteen knights, making in the whole eighteen members of the order, and seven officers. The Lord-Lieutenant or Viceroy of Ireland, for the time being, is grand master. The officers of the order are, the Lord Primate the Archbishop of Armagh, prelate; the Archbishop of Dublin, chancellor; the Dean of St. Patrick, registrar; a secretary; a genealogist; an usher of the black rod; Ulster king of arms; and Athlone pursuivant of arms, attendant upon the order. The knights have each three esquires, and are installed in the cathedral of St. Patrick, in Dublin, with great ceremony.

The star is of silver embroidery, with eight points, or rays, the four central being somewhat longer than the angular ones; upon a circular centre argent, a cross saltier gules, surmounted by a trefoil or shamrock, slipped, proper, each leaf charged with an imperial crown or, within a circle or fillet of gold, inscribed with the motto, Quis seperabit? (Who shall separate us?) MDCCLXXXIII. all within a wreath of shamrock, and worn upon the left side of the coat or cloak. See Pl. 15, fig. 7.

The collar is of pure gold, composed of six harps and five roses, joined alternately by twelve knots; in the centre is a crown, and pendent thereto by a harp is the badge, or jewel of the order, of an oval form, enamelled similar to the device in the centre of the star. See Pl. 15, fig. 7.

The badge is likewise worn pendent from a light blue ribbon scarfways over the right shoulder.

Ceremonial of the first Investiture of the knights of this Order, which took place at Dublin Castle, 11 March, 1783, that day having been appointed for the ceremony by Earl Temple, then Lord Lieutenant, the noblemen named in his Majesty's letter to be Knights Companions of the Order, having been summoned to attend, in order to be invested with the ensigns thereof, previous to their Installation.

Being assembled in the presence-chamber, a procession was made from thence to the great ball-room, as follows.

Pursuivants,
and Officers attending the state.
Peers named in the King's letter, viz.—

Earls
Bective and Charlemont, Courtoun and Mornington,
Clanbrassil and Shannon,
Tyrone and Drogheda,
Inchiquin and Westmeath,
Earl of Clanricarde, and the Duke of Leinster.

Officers of his Excellency's Household, viz.—

Pages,
Gentlemen at large,
Gentlemen of the Chamber,
Master of the Ceremonies,
Gentlemen of the Horse,
Comptroller and Steward of the Household.
Officers of the Order, viz.
Pursuivants,
Heralds,
Registrar and Herald,
Secretary and Genealogist, Chancellor,

Usher King of Arms, bearing his Majesty's commission, and the badge and ribbon of the Grand Master upon a blue velvet cushion.

Lord Viscount Carhampton, bearing the sword of state.

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, with ten Aides-de-camps on each side.

Gold Stick,
Yeomen of the Guard.

On their arrival in the great ball-room, the different persons composing the procession proceeded to the places assigned them; and his excellency being covered, and seated in the chair of state, Ulster king of arms presented to him his majesty's letter, which his excellency delivered to the right honourable John Hely Hutchinson, secretary of state, who read the same aloud, during which time his excellency and the assembly remained standing and uncovered. His excellency being again seated, Ulster presented to him the blue ribbon and badge of grand master, with which his excellency invested himself. His excellency then signified his majesty's pleasure, that the great ball-room should be styled the Hall of St. Patrick, which was done by proclamation made by the king of arms, at the sound of trumpets, and with the usual formalities; after which,

His excellency directed the king of arms and usher of the black rod, to introduce his grace the Lord Archbishop of Dublin, to whom the secretary of state administered the oath, as chancellor of the order; and his grace kneeling, was invested by the grand master with the proper badge, and received from his excellency's hands the purse containing the seals.

The Dean of St. Patrick was then introduced, to whom the oath of registrar of the order was administered by the chancellor; and he was, in like manner, invested by his excellency, who delivered to him the statutes and register of the order. Lord Delvin was next introduced, and, having taken the oath, was invested as secretary; and in like manner, Charles Henry Coote, Esq. as genealogist, John Freemantle, Esq. as Usher, and William Hawkins, Esq. as king of arms of the said order, (the oath being first administered to them by the chancellor) were severally invested by the grand master.

His excellency then signified his majesty's pleasure, that, in consideration of the tender age of Prince Edward, his royal highness should be invested in England, and that his majesty's dispensation for that purpose should be entered upon the register of the order; and in consequence of his majesty's direction, the Lord Baron Muskerry was knighted, and declared proxy to his royal highness Prince Edward.

His excellency then directed that his grace the Duke of Leinster should be called in; and as, by the statutes of the order, none but a knight can be elected or invested, his grace, being introduced by the usher and the king of arms, was knighted by his excellency with the sword of state, and immediately delivered to the genealogist the proofs of blood required by the statutes, whereupon the oaths were administered by the chancellor, and his grace kneeling, was invested, by the grand master, with the ribbon and badge. His grace then joined the procession, to introduce the Earl of Clanricarde, who, being sworn, was invested in like manner, and both knights joined the procession to bring in the Earl of Westmeath; after which the two junior knights performed this duty, and the senior knight took his seat as companion of the order. The Earls of Inchiquin, Drogheda, Tyrone, Shannon, Clanbrassil, Mornington, Courtoun, Charlemont, and Bective, being severally introduced by the two junior knights, were each of them sworn by the chancellor, and invested by the grand master, and took their seats as knights companions.

The ceremony of investiture being ended, his majesty's pleasure was declared and registered, for appointing his grace the Lord Archbishop of Armagh, Primate and Metropolitan of Ireland, to be prelate of the said most illustrious order.

A procession was then made from St. Patrick's hall to the presence-chamber, where the lord lieutenant received the compliments of the knights of the order, and of a numerous assembly of the nobility and gentry, who testified their satisfaction on this distinguishing mark of the royal favour to the kingdom. St. Patrick's hall was elegantly fitted up for the occasion, and the galleries belonging to it were crowded with ladies of the first rank and fashion; and the whole ceremony was conducted with the utmost propriety, and with the most splendid magnificence.

St. Patrick.*

The day appointed for the installation was the 17th of March, when the lord lieutenant, preceded by his own carriages, containing his household, the esquires of the sovereign, and the peer who carried the sword of state, and attended by a squadron of cavalry, set forward from the castle of Dublin, followed by the knights companions, each in a coach attended by their esquires.

At the door of the cathedral of St Patrick, his excellency was met by the officers of the church and of the order, who attended him to the robing-room: his excellency alone being in the full mantle, habit, and collar of the order: the other knights in the surcoat only, and with their caps and feathers in their hands; their mantles, collars, and swords, having been previously sent to the chapter-room.

So soon as his excellency had notified his pleasure, the procession was made to the choir, in the following manner:

Singing Men.
Prebends.
Messengers.
Kettle-Drums.
Trumpets.
Pursuivants.
Pages.
Gentlemen at large.
Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber.
Gentlemen of the Horse, Chamberlain, and Gentleman Usher.
Steward and Comptroller.
Esquires.
Heralds.
Knights.
Ulster, Registrar, and Usher.
Genealogist, Chancellor, Secretary, Prelate.
Sword of State, carried by a senior Peer.
Aide-de-Camp, Lord Lieutenant, Aide-de-Camp.
Peers' Sons.
Train-bearer.
Colonel of Battle-axes.
Battle-axe Guards.

Upon entering the choir, the trumpets, pursuivants, and other officers attending the procession, proceeded to their proper places, as did his excellency's suite. The esquires, three abreast, made their reverences to the altar when they came opposite the stall of their knight, and then wheeled off to their respective places; the knights then entered, two and two, and after the same reverences, proceeded to their stalls, where they remained standing till his excellency was seated, when they bowed altogether, and seated themselves. The choir then performed the coronation anthem; after which the usher, king of arms, heralds, and pursuivants, attended with the three esquires of the senior knights, went out with the usual reverences for the insignia of the order, with which they returned in manner following, viz.—

The principal esquire, bearing the banner furled.
The two other esquires, bearing the mantle and sword.
Ulster carrying the great collar of the order upon a blue velvet cushion.

When they had proceeded to the centre of the choir, they remained there, while the four great officers of the order proceeded to the stall of the said senior knight, after the usual reverences to the sovereign's stall; the knight then descended into the middle of the choir, where he was invested with the sword, the mantle, and the collar, by the chancellor and registrar, after reading the admonitions prescribed, viz. upon putting on the sword, "Take this sword to the increase of your honour, and in token and sign of the most illustrious order which you have received, wherewith you being defended, may be bold strongly to fight in the defence of those rights and ordinaries to which you be engaged, and to the just and necessary defence of those that be oppressed and needy."

Upon putting on the mantle, "Receive this robe and livery of this most illustrious order, in augmentation of thine honour, and wear it with the firm and steady resolution, that by your character, conduct, and demeanour, you may approve yourself a true servant of Almighty God, and a worthy brother and knight companion of this most illustrious order." Upon putting on the collar, "Sir, the loving company of the order of St. Patrick have received you their brother, lover, and fellow, and in token and knowledge of this, they give you and present you this badge, the which God will that you receive and wear from henceforth to his praise and pleasure, and to the exaltation and honour of the said illustrious order and yourself."

They then conducted him to his stall, with the usual reverences to the sovereign, and he seated himself with his cap upon his head; immediately after which, the esquire unfurled the banner, and the knights standing up covered, Ulster repeated his style in English, and a procession was made to the altar, by the registrar and officers of arms, attended by the esquires with the banner, which was delivered to Ulster, who presented to the registrar, to be placed by him within the rails of the altar. After which, with the usual reverences, the esquires proceeded to their places, and the officers of arms proceeded with the esquires of the second knight, in like manner as before. When those ceremonies were finished, the choir performed the Te Deum; after which, a procession was made, in like manner as before, to the chapter room, and from thence to the castle, where the knights reposed themselves till dinner was served; when a procession was again made from the presence-chamber to St. Patrick's Hall, when the knights took their seats covered; the grand master in the centre, the prince's chair on his left hand, the prelate and the chancellor at the two ends of the sovereign's table, and the knights on each side; and the esquires remained standing till after grace was said, when they retired to the seats prepared for them.

Towards the end of the first course, when his excellency stood up uncovered, the knights rose uncovered, and the king of arms proclaimed by the sound of a trumpet, that the grand master and knights companions of the most illustrious order of St. Patrick drank the sovereign's health. The second course was then brought in, with the usual ceremonies; after which his excellency again stood up, and the knights uncovered, Ulster again proclaimed that the grand master, in the name of the sovereign, drank the healths of the knights companions. And at the end of the second course, all rising again uncovered, the queen's health was drank and proclaimed in the same manner. The dessert was then brought in; during which the officers of arms, with the usual reverence, cried largesse thrice, and first proclaimed the style of the sovereign, and afterwards of each knight companion, who successively stood up during the said proclamation. After which the knights, esquires, and officers attended the grand master to the presence-chamber, where the ceremony finished; and the esquires and officers retired to the dinuer prepared for them.

SAINTS PETER AND PAUL. The order of St. Peter was first instituted at Rome, in 1520, by Pope Leo X. to defend the sea-coasts of his territories against the ravages of the Turks. The number of knights was limited to four hundred, and they wore a gold medallion, with the image of St. Peter, pendent to a gold chain.

In 1534, or 1540, Pope Paul III. instituted the order of St. Paul, which was united to that of St. Peter. After this union, the knights wore three gold chains; and on one side of the medallion, pendent thereto, was the image of St. Paul, and on the other, that of St. Peter, enamelled in proper colours. See Pl. 11, fig. 18.

ST. BEMI. See HOLY PHIAL.

ST. RUPERT, a German order, instituted in 1701, by John Ernest-Louis De Thun, Archbishop of Saltzburg, in Bavaria, in honour of St. Rupert, the first bishop of that city, and to perpetuate the memory of the treaty of Carlowitz.

The Emperor Leopold I. confirmed this order, and endowed it with a revenue of twelve thousand crowns. The knights were selected from amongst the most illustrious of the nobility.

Upon the 15th of November, 1701, the prince-archbishop, in consequence of such confirmation by the emperor, chose twelve illustrious personages, and held a chapter in the church of the Holy Trinity, where, with great pomp, he invested each knight with the ensigns of the order, the ceremony concluding with a magnificent banquet.

The order was limited to twelve commanders, and as many knights; and the badge, which is suspended from the neck by a dark crimson ribbon, edged with black, is, a cross of eight points, enamelled white: upon a circular centre azure, the image of St. Rupert, holding up the right hand, and supporting with the left a crozier; a mitre upon his head. See Pl. 11, fig. 21. On the centre, upon the reverse, are the initials J. E. surmounted with a prince's cap or crown.

The commanders likewise wear a rich gold star upon the left side of their usual habit; it is nearly of the same form as the badge, embroidered in spangles, with the initials J. E. in gold, upon a sky-blue escutcheon in the centre.

Each commander enjoys a prebend to the annual amount of two hundred pounds sterling; and this order is considered one of the most honourable of the empire.

ST. SAMPSON, of Constantinople and of Corinth, an order but little known, excepting it was united in 1308 to that of St. John of Jerusalem.

ST. SAVIOUR, a Spanish order, instituted about the year 1118, or 1120, by Alphonsa I. King of Arragon, for the purpose of expelling the Moors from his dominions. These knights, for their good services, were established in the room of the Templars, who had been abolished. Their reformed statutes somewhat resembled those of the order which they replaced.

The badge of the order was, originally, a representation of God the Father, habited in papal vestments, and a triple crown upon his head. After the reform of the order, this badge was laid aside, and they wore, pendent at the breast, from a red ribbon, a cross moline of gold, enamelled gules, which, on days of ceremony, was attached to a collar, composed of three rows of chains of gold. The badge was likewise embroidered on a white garment. Some years after the expulsion of the Moors, the revenues of the order were annexed to the crown, and it continued to flourish long after.

ST. SEPULCHRE, MILITARY HOSPITALERS OF. As to the origin of this order, authors differ in opinion; but its institution is generally attributed to Godfrey de Bouillon, in 1099, after the entry of the crusades into Jerusalem, to guard the holy sepulchre, protect the pilgrims, and for the rescue of Christian slaves.

Louis VII. upon his return from Palestine, brought with him twenty of the brotherhood of this order, and established them at St. Sampson d'Orleans, where they continued until 1254, at which time St. Louis removed them to the church of the holy chapel in Paris, where pilgrims and others, intending to visit the Holy Land, were required to inscribe their names.

In 1489, Pope Innocent VIII. united this order, with all its possessions, to that of Malta, though the union was never regularly established; but the order has not ceased to exist in France, and the Guardian of the holy sepulchre at Jerusalem has always preserved the privilege of creating the knights.

On the 19th of August, 1814, Louis XVIII. promised his protection to the order of the Holy Sepulchre, which in France is composed, independent of the king and the princes of the blood royal, of four hundred and fifty members, viz. grand officers, officers, knights, and novices. At their reception into the order, they swear to support the honour and religion of the king, and engage to pay a droit of three thousand francs.

The administrator-general wears, on the left side of his habit, a silver star, formed of double points and half-circular projections, alternately; upon which, encircled with two branches of palm-gold, are the arms of Jerusalem. See Pl. 13, fig. 14.

The officers suspend the following badge from the button-hole: a golden cross potent, with four fleurs-de-lis between the principal angles; upon a circular centre argent, edged with gold, a similar cross, cantoned with four others, gules; on the top of the badge, a crown, by which, from a ring, it is attached to a broad black ribbon. See Pl. 13, fig. 10.

The officers likewise wear, on the left side of their habit, a cross potent, with a like cross between each of the principal angles, embroidered in red silk. See Pl. 13, fig. 15.

The badge of the knights differs from that of the officers, in having the arms of Jerusalem upon the medallion, and they do not wear the embroidered cross upon the habit.

The serving brothers wear a gold medal, of a lozenge form, enamelled white, upon which is a cross potent or, charged with a circular centre argent, bearing a cross potent, with a like cross between each of the four principal angles, gules. See Pl. 13, fig. 12.

The knights who received their institution at Jerusalem, wear a badge, composed of a cross potent of gold, with the four similar crosses between the angles, enamelled red, which badge is suspended by a ring, from a broad black watered ribbon. See Pl. 13, fig. 13.

The collar of the order is composed of red crosses potent, with similar crosses between the principal angles, linked together by a chain of gold, and from which is suspended the badge. See Pl. 13, fig. 11.

ST. STANISLAUS, a Polish order, instituted 7th of May, 1765, by Stanislaus-Augustus Poniatowski, King of Poland, in honour of the patron of that kingdom.

The number of knights, exclusive of the king, and the knights of the White Eagle, (who, in consequence of being such, are knights of this order,) and foreigners, was fixed at one hundred.

For admission, it was necessary to prove four descents of nobility, both in the paternal and maternal line, before one of the chancellors of the kingdom, or of the great duchy of Lithuania. Each knight pays annually four ducats, or forty francs, to the Hospital of the Infant Jesus, at Warsaw.

His majesty was declared grand master and sovereign of the order, and that office was attached to the crown of Poland.

On the feast-day of St. Stanislaus, being the 8th of May, and on the anniversaries of the elections, coronations, and birth-days of reigning kings, all the knights, who are attendant upon the sovereign, and are at that time present at court, wear the habit of the order, and the higher insignia, under certain penalties for non-compliance.

One of the prelates executes the office of secular chaplain, as well as secretary, and is decorated with the insignia. His duty consists in the performance of the public rites of the order at their assemblies. He must keep a correct register or list of all the knights, and must preserve an account of the receipts and expenditure of monies deposited by the knights, rendering the balance yearly.

Upon the decease of a knight, the heir is to give notice of his death, and deliver into the king's hands, within three months, the insignia of the deceased knight.

The knights take precedence according to the date of admission, at the assemblies of the order, and not according to rank or official dignity.

Upon the festival of St. Stanislaus, an appropriate solemn mass, with a collect and sermon suited to the solemnity, is celebrated in the church of the Congregation of the Mission, in the Cracow suburb, by one of the bishops, then included in the number of knights, or, in his absence, by the ordinary of the place, dignified priest, or prelate of the order. At this celebration, the king, seated upon a throne, and accompanied by all the knights residing at Warsaw, assists in person. Upon a table, near the throne, covered with rich tapestry, are placed the insignia of the order, for such new subjects as are to be invested. When the solemnities of the mass are concluded, one of the chancellors of the kingdom addresses the knight to be created, to the following effect, in their native tongue:

His royal and sacred majesty, our most clement lord, equally desirous of rewarding the services already rendered to him and his kingdom, and also to incite to the performance of future ones, invites you to his throne, to invest you with the insignia of the order of St. Stanislaus, when you shall have first entered into the engagement to perform the obligations following.

Then the secretary reads the following obligations:

1. That the knights shall inviolably observe fidelity and attachment to the king and republic, so long as they live.

2. That they shall relieve the poor according to their power, and assist the oppressed as much as they are able.

3. That each of the knights created shall, at the time of his admission into the order, pay into the hands of the almoner twenty-five ducats, and every year four ducats, for the public hospital of the Infant Jesus, situated in Warsaw, and two ducats to the chancery. The national knights shall moreover pay what may be deemed proper for the prayers offered up for the deceased brethren, on a day within the octave of All Saints. They shall deposit every year one ducat with the almoner.

4. When a knight of the order shall happen to die, each of the national knights shall cause thirty masses to be celebrated for the deceased brother; and they shall endeavour to assist the departed soul by pious prayer and devout intercessions, such as are customary on similar occasions.

5. No one of the knights shall accept or bear any other order, without the consent of the king; otherwise he shall be expelled from the number of the knights; and henceforward no citizen of the kingdom, of those who shall have obtained a foreign order, without the said consent, shall be admitted a knight of the orders of Poland.

Then the knights approaching the king's throne, after they shall have pronounced these words:—"I promise, on my word of honour, that I will fulfil all these articles which have been just read," each being called by the almoner, one after the other, shall bend their left knee before the king, who shall, in the like manner above described, put the insignia of the order upon each, and touching the arms of the knight with a drawn sword, shall embrace each of them; and the knight, having kissed the king's hand, shall retire from the throne.

This order was at length bestowed with such profusion that it lost its consequence, but regained new lustre at the creation of the duchy of Warsaw, in 1807. It was renewed with great solemnity by the Emperor Alexander, 1st December, 1815: but was changed in its form, and divided into four classes.

The badge is, an eight-pointed cross, enamelled red, beaded at the points gold, with the Polish eagle between each of the principal angles, argent, imperially crowned or; upon the circular centre white, surrounded with a wreath of laurel vert, is the figure of St. Stanislaus, enamelled, proper; and upon the centre, on the reverse, are the letters S A in a cipher, between two small S's. See Pl. 13, fig. 17; reverse, Pl. 13, fig. 20. This badge is attached by a ring to a broad watered red ribbon, edged with white, and is worn scarfways from left to right, by the first class of the order, who likewise wear on the left breast a silver star of rays of eight points; upon the centre of which are the letters S A R in a cipher, encircled with an ornamental fillet of gold. See Pl. 13, fig. 18.

The second class of the order suspend the badge from the neck, collarways, and wear the same star as the first class.

The third class wear the badge like the second, but without the star; and the fourth class suspend the badge from the button-hole.

Formerly, the cipher upon the centre of the star was encircled with a fillet, inscribed Præmiando incitat. See Pl. 13, fig. 19.

ST. STEPHEN, an Austrian order, instituted 5th May, 1764, by the Empress Maria-Theresa, in honour of St. Stephen, the first Christian King of Hungary, and to reward services rendered to the state. The order is considered as civil, or diplomatic, and is divided into three classes, viz. twenty grand crosses, thirty commanders, and fifty knights: but the number is not scrupulously adhered to, nor are the ecclesiastics comprised in it. The dignity of grand cross is conferred only upon the archdukes, princes of sovereign houses, and noblemen of old and distinguished families; but the rank of commander and knight is bestowed for merit alone; and, by the statutes of the order, the degree of baron or lord is granted upon demand, to such as do not possess that dignity, and the usual diploma is issued gratuitously, and the title is hereditary.

The festival of the order is celebrated on St. Stephen's day; and the officers are, an almoner or prelate, (being the Archbishop de Gran) a chancellor, (being the chancellor of state) a treasurer, secretary, herald of arms, and a keeper of the records.

The badge is, a cross pattée gold, enamelled green: upon a circular centre red, is a patriarchal cross, thrice crossed, argent, issuing from a ducal coronet or, placed on a mount of three ascents vert, (being the arms of Hungary) between the letters M T, also argent, surrounded with a fillet, enamelled white, inscribed, Publicum meritum præmium, in letters of gold. Above the cross, is an antique regal crown, peculiar to the kingdom of Hungary, from the top of which it is attached by a ring to a red ribbon, with a broad border of green. See Pl. 13, fig. 1. It is worn scarfways from right to left, by the grand crosses; round the neck, by the commanders; and by the knights, from the button-hole.

The collar worn by the grand crosses, upon particular occasions, is of gold, and composed of the regal crown of Hungary, double S, and a single M repeated, and united alternately: in the centre, a dove volant, surrounded with a fillet, inscribed, Stringit amore, from which is pendent the badge before described. See Pl. 13, fig. 3.

The grand crosses likewise wear on the left side, a silver star of eight points of straight rays, with a short one wavy between each point: the centre the same as the badge, surrounded with a green fillet, edged with gold, and an outer ornamental border of rose colour, encircled with a wavy edge, likewise of gold. See Pl. 13, fig. 2.

A particular uniform is worn upon ceremonial days, when the grand crosses suspend the badge from a collar composed of double S's surmounted with Hungarian crowns, and the letters M T in a cipher, ensigned with the imperial diadem, linked together alternately: and from a rose placed in the middle, hangs the badge.

ST. STEPHEN, of Tuscany, or ST. STEPHEN, POPE AND MARTYR, a military order, instituted at Florence, about the year 1562, by Cosmo di Medicis, Grand Duke of Tuscany, to commemorate a victory gained over Marshal de Strozzi, at Marciano, in August, 1554, upon the feast-day of St. Stephen; and for the expulsion of pirates, who infested the Mediterranean. The chief residence of these knights was at Pisa; since at Cosmopolis, in the the Island of Elba. Pope Pius IV. confirmed the order, and acknowledged the Duke of Tuscany as grand master.

These knights have, at various times, given great proofs of their bravery. They took many vessels from the Turks, and fought in defence of the island of Malta; and, likewise, in 1678, rescued nearly six thousand Christians, and fifteen thousand slaves. Their last expedition was in defence of Venice, against their old enemies, the Turks, in 1684, when they took a great number of cannon, from which they cast statues of Cosmo I. and his grandson Ferdinand I. which are still preserved at Florence.

The order was revived in 1764, and the statutes underwent some alteration; it then consisted of twenty grand crosses, thirty commanders, and fifty knights, exclusive of the emperor, (who is sovereign,) princes of the blood, and cardinals; and much resembling the order of Malta, or Hospitalers of St. John of Jerusalem, having chaplains, serving brothers, or servants of arms. The dignitaries of the order, are, grand commanders, grand constable, admiral, grand prior, grand chancellor, treasurer, conservator-general, and the metropolitan prior, who are all, excepting the first, elected every three years at a general chapter, held on Whitsunday, when all the knights are obliged to appear in person. At these general chapters, twelve knights are chosen, who form a permanent council. The order possessed twenty-three priories, thirty-five bailiwicks, and a great number of well endowed commanderies.

The festival of the order is observed on the 3rd of August, being the anniversary of St. Stephen of Tuscany.

The badge of the order is, an eight-pointed cross, enamelled red, edged with gold, with fleurs-de-lis between the principal angles, and an imperial crown upon the top, also of gold. It is suspended by a ring from a red ribbon. See Pl. 14, fig. 15. The star is all of silver, formed like the badge, omitting the imperial crown on the top, as in Pl. 14, fig. 16.

The chaplains wear only the cross in red stuff; and the badge of the serving brothers has but three limbs, or branches.

The members are habited in a particular uniform after the Spanish fashion. The hat is black, adorned with one white and one red feather.

ST. WOLODEMIR, instituted 22nd September, 1782, by the Empress Catharine II. of Russia, being the anniversary of her coronation. It is both civil and military, and founded in memory of Wolodemir the Great, who first established the Christian religion in Russia.

The order is composed of four classes; and it is not necessary to pass through the inferior to the first. Persons in the civil departments of government, who have served with fidelity for thirty-five successive years, are entitled to this order; and a certain number of the knights receive pensions.

A chapter of the order is held annually, to decide upon the claims of candidates; and the feast of the order is celebrated on the 22nd of September.

This order was not conferred during the reign of Paul I. The Emperor Alexander revived it at the same time with that of St. George, and ordained new statutes; and the number of knights amounts to several thousands. The insignia must not be ornamented with diamonds.

The badge is, a cross pattée, gules, bordered with black, and edged with gold; upon a circular centre sable, surrounded with a rim of gold, is a mantle, with a regal crown over it, enclosing a Russian character, and upon the reverse the date of the foundation. See Pl. 15, fig. 1. This badge is suspended by a ring from a red ribbon, edged with black, and worn scarfways from right to left, by the first class; the knights of the second and third class suspend it from the neck, the badge of the latter being somewhat smaller; and those of the fourth class wear it from the button-hole; and, by way of distinction, those who obtain the order for military service, wear a rosette upon the ribbon.

The first and second classes of the order likewise wear on the left side, a star of eight points of rays, the four in cross of silver, and those in saltier of gold: upon a circular centre sable, a cross pattée, between four Russian characters, signifying, St. Prince Wolodemir, who resembled the Apostles; surrounding this device, is a red fillet, edged with gold, inscribed with like Russian characters, which signify utility, honour, reputation. See Pl. 15, fig. 2.

SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD, or ST. SAVIOUR, instituted in 1561, by Eric XIII. King of Sweden, upon his marriage with the Princess Catharine, sister to Sigismund, King of Poland. The collar of the order was composed of cherubim and columns of gold, from which was suspended an oval badge, bearing the image of our Saviour. The order was abolished upon the reformation under Gustavus Vasa.

SERAPHIM, or JESUS, an order of Sweden, instituted by Magnus II. in 1334, after the siege of Upsal, the metropolitan city of that kingdom. It flourished from the era of its foundation until the reformation under Gustavus Vasa, when it was discontinued, and remained dormant (excepting during a short interval in the reign of Charles X.) until 17th April, 1748; when it was revived by Frederick I. who reformed the statutes, which still remain. This order could only be conferred on sovereigns, princes, or persons of high station, equal in rank to that of lieutenant-general. The number of knights, besides the king and princes of the royal family, is fixed at twenty-four natives of Sweden, and eight foreigners; and it is only composed of one class, who swear, upon admission, to defend the honour and statutes of the order; to die for God, the Christian faith, and the prosperity of the kingdom; and to protect widows, orphans, and the poor.

Natives of Sweden cannot be admitted into this order, until they have first obtained either the order of the Sword, or of the Polar Star; and upon receiving this order of the Seraphim, they are entitled to promotion to the rank of commanders in the one previously obtained.

The annual festival of this order is held on the 28th April; and on ceremonial days, the king dines with the knights, who wear their hats; and the arms, and day of reception of the knights, are engraved upon copper-plates affixed in the church of Ritterholm.

The badge of the order is, an eight-pointed white enamelled cross of gold, with seraphim disposed between the principal angles in carnation-coloured enamel, and upon each limb of the cross is a patriarchal cross of gold: upon a circular centre azure, are the letters I. H. S. in gold, with a cross over the H: between three crowns, under the lowest of which are represented the passion-nails. See Pl. 15, fig. 4. The badge is ensigned with a regal crown of Sweden, by which it is pendent, on ordinary occasions, from a sky-blue-coloured watered ribbon, and is worn scarfways from right to left: on the reverse of the centre of the badge, is, Fredericus, Rex Suecica.

The knights also wear, upon the left breast, a silver embroidered star, formed like the badge, but not ensigned with the regal crown. See Pl. 15, fig. 3.

The treasurer, secretary, and master of the ceremonies likewise wear the star, but suspend the badge from the neck, which the inferior officers of the order wear from the button-hole. Upon ceremonial days, the badge is suspended from a collar, composed of eleven golden seraphim heads, and the like number of patriarchal crosses, of enamelled bright carnation-colour, placed alternately, and united by chains of gold.* See Pl. 15, fig. 4.

The habit of ceremony consists of a white satin dress, bordered with black silk lace, made after the Spanish fashion; and above it, a short white satin mantle, (upon which is embroidered the star,) lined with black, and bordered with a deep black silk lace. The hat, which is of black velvet, is round, with a narrow brim, and adorned on the left side with two large white ostrich's feathers. The motto of the order is, Jesus hominum salvator.

Charles Gustavus,† by the grace of God, King of

* This description of the collar and badge, given by several authors, does not agree with the statutes of the order, which follow.

† This prince was the only son of John Casimir, Prince Palatin, of the branch of Deux-Ponts and of the Princess Catharine, the only sister of the great Gustavus-Adolphus. Upon the abdication of Queen Christina, in 1654, he succeeded to the throne of Sweden, by the title of Charles X. He was father of Charles XI. and the grandfather of Charles XII. and of the Princess Ulrica-Eleonora, who dying without issue, in her became extinct this branch of the Palatin family. She was married to Frederick, Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, and King of Sweden, the paternal great uncle to the reigning landgrave.

Sweden, of the Goths and Vandals, Great Prince of Finlande, &c.

As there is nothing more great nor more elevated amongst men, than the dignity of royal majesty; so likewise, there is nothing more thorny, nor more difficult, than for a monarch to acquit himself worthily of the duties of royalty; the prudence of princes being of itself too feeble to govern their people according to justice, of which they are the dispensers on the part of God. We ought to acknowledge, that just and equitable kings are the pure works of that Divine Majesty of whom, in fact, they are the living images upon the earth.

This truth has been confirmed by the examples which we have of so many potentates who have signalized their reigns by their virtues; but particularly in the persons of those illustrious princes of the royal House of Vasa, whose diadem has descended unto us. It is not without confusion, that we see ourselves elevated upon the same throne, with qualities so inferior to those with which they were endowed, and which have rendered their reigns so celebrated throughout all nations. In this sentiment, and daring not to presume anything of ourselves, we have judged that we cannot undertake anything more advantageous for our people, nor more glorious to the reputation of our crown, than to walk in the footsteps of these great men, and to consider their laudable actions as the sole rule for our own; and as they constantly established the foundation thereof on that piety and honour which they rendered to God, as the author and source of all good, we should entertain a belief that we had degenerated, did we not attempt to imitate them in a matter so essential, and the first of all others; wherefore, having learnt, in the ancient chronicles of our realm, that they in times past had instituted the order of the name of Jesus, which they wore, and conferred upon their most dear, most zealous, and most faithful subjects, as a mark that they did not look for the greatness and glory of their reigns and of their states as forthcoming from the prudence of their government, nor from the force and puissance of their people and their armies, but from the sovereign virtue of that holy name which penetrates even to the throne of the Most High, to obtain his grace and illumination, to suspend his justice, to award his choler and the thunders of his vengeance; we have therefore resolved to revive in us the virtue of our forefathers, and to follow so pious an example, by instituting, or rather re-establishing, an order so laudable and so holy, to the end we may obtain from God, by the sacred name of Jesus, the wisdom of his Spirit, to reign over the nations which are intrusted to us according to the rules of his divine will; to incite those of our states who occupy the places most eminent, and who ought to serve as examples to others, to live in that peace and union of which our Saviour Jesus himself traced the model for us; to have continually before our eyes the memory of our ancestors, and to be animated, one and all, with the praiseworthy design of imitating them; in short, to the end that, leaving to posterity an eternal mark of the piety of the kings our predecessors, we may, at the same time, leave an immortal testimony of our gratitude towards the illustrious royal House of Vasa, from which, by the liberality of our most dear and honoured lady and mother, Queen Christina, we have received this crown.

The Form of the Order.

To this effect our intention is, that the order be permanent and immutable; and that it shall remain, as to form and figure, in manner following, and that without ever undergoing any alteration, change, innovation, or retrenchment on the part of the kings our successors.

The badge shall be a radiant sun of gold, the beams of which are of burnished gold, and the interior circle must be enamelled white. In the centre of the disk of this sun, shall appear the name of Jesus, the characters of which shall be traced and embellished with diamonds. This sun, in its dimensions, shall altogether be equal to a six-dollar, and shall be suspended from a double collar, of which the first shall be as a chain of cherubim, the extremities of their wings shall be united with small chains of gold; which collar, being an ancient institution of the kings of Sweden, our predecessors, we will inviolably preserve the same. The second collar shall be composed of four crowns, disposed in such a manner that they shall divide the collar into four equal parts, in memory of that crown which was ceded to us. In the middle of the space, which shall be observable between the crowns, shall be inserted a sheaf, or vasa, and in the intervals the ciphers of the four illustrious princes of this House who have reigned; to wit, those of Gustavus I. Charles IX. Gustavus-Adolphus, and Christina. Those two collars shall be of gold, and such parts as may require it shall be enamelled. To the end that the same may be a most distinguishing embellishment, this double collar shall form a circumference equal to a Swedish ell, but so disposed that the upper part be something smaller in circumference. In the place of this collar, (which shall be worn only on great solemnities,) the sun shall be suspended from a watered ribbon of silver tissue, of the breadth of four fingers, denoting by that colour the purity of Jesus, to whose example all Christians ought to conform. The same sun must be made and represented in embroidery, and affixed to the left side of the cassocks, or mantles, which are usually worn; the embroidery shall be fine, and entirely of silver, and one half-quarter of an ell in diameter.

The Officers of the Order.

The kings of Sweden shall be perpetual grand masters of this order. Afterwards shall be classed the knights, who, as princes, enjoy precedence according to the rank they shall hold by birth; as senators, according to that which they hold in the senate; and in default of the senatorial dignity, according to the priority of their reception into the said order.

From the body of the knights, the grand master shall name whomsoever he pleases, and shall honour him with the dignity of chancellor; to have the care to explain the intentions of his majesty, to pronounce the panegyrics of the knights, and to perform all suitable functions in the assemblies of the order. From the same corps, his majesty shall select another to be the marshal, who, in this quality, shall superintend the ceremonies of creation, convoke the assemblies, place every one according to his rank, and execute all the other duties which are attributed to that employment. Besides these officers, one or two secretaries shall likewise be elected by the king; and they shall have it in charge to read aloud all matters which are deemed necessary to be made public, to keep the acts of this equestrian body, and an exact matricular register of the creation of knights, and to do all other matters which appertain to the employment aforesaid.

The Ceremony of the Reception of Knights.

The king and all the knights being assembled, and his majesty placed upon the throne, a knight of the order, after having obtained permission of the king, shall pronounce a discourse upon the sanctity, nobleness, and antiquity of this equestrian brotherhood; upon its institution, and the honour which the subjects have, to participate in such a mark of the affection of their prince; and afterwards shall recapitulate the merits and notable actions of the knight postulant, demonstrating publicly the causes and reasons which have induced the grand master to aggregate him to this order. This oration being terminated, the marshal shall go and take the postulant, and shall conduct him before his majesty, when he shall bend one knee on the ground, upon a cushion prepared for that purpose. Then the chancellor and one of the secretaries advancing towards his majesty's left hand, the secretary, by command of the chancellor, shall read the rules and statutes; after which the chancellor, telling the postulant to raise his hand, shall demand of him, "Do you promise to accept, maintain, and respect these ordonnances inviolably, and in all their points?" The postulant shall answer, "Yes." "To live and die faithful to the King?" He shall answer, "Yes." "To nourish and maintain peace and concord with your brethren?" "Yes." "To do nothing unworthy of the honour and of the grandeur of so sacred a knightly fraternity?" He shall answer, "Yes, yes, yes."

After that, the marshal presenting the order to the king, his majesty shall rise and descend from the throne, and, with the aid of the marshal and chancellor, shall come and put the order upon the shoulders of the postulant, who is kneeling, saying to him, "The King creates thee a knight of the name of Jesus;" and at the same time embracing him, and saluting him on the cheek with these words, "The peace of Jesus Christ be with us." This done, the king shall replace himself on the throne, and the chancellor, conducted by the marshal, shall raise the new-created knight, who shall go and make his obeisance to the king, putting one knee on the ground, and kissing the hand of his majesty. Afterwards, constantly accompanied by the marshal, he shall go and embrace and salute all the knights companions, after each other, saying to them what the King had said to him, "The peace of Jesus Christ be with us." Then the marshal shall conduct him to his proper place. The same ceremony shall be practised with respect to each individual knight: except to save time, (in case the king creates many,) the chancellor, after the reception of the first knight, shall only demand of the others, "Do ye promise to accept, maintain, and observe the statutes of the order, which you have just heard read?" And this ceremony being terminated, the king shall rise, and, preceded by his court and the knights, marching two and two, shall go to church, where Te Deum shall be solemnly chanted. This finished, the college shall reconduct his majesty to his apartment, and when he is entered, the company shall separate, and each one apart shall go and divest himself of the collar, and resume the usual decorations.

The Statutes of the Order.

1. The king, as grand master and restorer of the order, shall be a knight born, and so shall the princes his sons.

2. His majesty shall choose such subjects as to him shall seem good, to honour them with this mark of distinction, and in such numbers as to him shall seem meet, either Swedes or foreigners.

3. His majesty shall create and invest the knights at such times as he shall think proper; he shall create one or more at a time, according to his will and pleasure.

4. When his majesty shall send the order to persons absent, doing them the honour to declare them knights by letter, they shall be recognized as true knights, even as much so as those who shall have been so created by his royal hand.

5. The knights who shall once have been aggregated to this equestrian corps, shall never quit the insignia from the moment they have received it, until the last of their existence, under pain of forfeiting those honours which have been conferred upon them by this royal grace: but must constantly wear the same on their persons, on their garments, and around their arms: even at their funerals the order shall be worn, as well as all the other appendages and attributes of their nobility.

6. At public solemnities, as, at the coronations of kings, at their marriages, at their interments, at the creation of knights companions, and at their obsequies, the knights shall be bound to wear the collar, in the same manner as when they were invested therewith; except on these great ceremonies, and others of a similar kind, the knights shall wear the badge attached to a white ribbon, as already described, and so suspended that it shall fall near the hilt of the sword.

7. All the knights, in whatsoever part of the world they may be, shall not fail to perform their devotions on the 2nd of June, in memory of the accession of us, Charles-Gustavus, to the throne; imploring the Holy Ghost for the prosperity of this state, and in testimony of thanksgiving for the grant made to us thereof by Queen Christina, our most dear and most honoured lady and mother.

8. If any knight, of whatsoever condition he may be, shall, in the smallest degree, emancipate himself from that respect and honour which he owes to the order, he shall be degraded for ever.

9. All those of this knightly fraternity, who, through indiscretion, shall censure the election of any of those knights upon whom the choice of the king may have fallen; or those who shall murmur that they themselves have not been nominated, if it can be proved by three unexceptionable witnesses, shall, during the remainder of their lives, be incapable of enjoying this sovereign badge of honour.

It being our will that all these articles, laws, ceremonies, and statutes be accepted and maintained inviolably by us, and the kings our successors; we have thought proper, on this account, to declare and specify the same, word for word, by these letters patent, to be guarded in the archives of the chancery of the said order, to the end, that recourse may be had thereto, in time and place; and to the end that no one shall pretend or plead cause of ignorance, we have signed the same with our hand, and have caused the royal seal of our arms to be affixed thereto.—A. C. 1656.

SICILIES, TWO, instituted 24th February, 1808, by Joseph Napoleon, to reward services rendered to the king and state, and as a recompense to such as had contributed to the conquest of the country. It was divided into three classes, consisting of fifty dignitaries, one hundred commanders, and six hundred knights.

Each member swears to sacrifice his life and fortune in defence of the crown and state.

The successor of Joseph Napoleon, Joachim Murat, continued the order, with some trivial alterations.

In 1815, King Ferdinand IV. upon being re-established on the throne of Naples, from political motives, preserved this order, and by decree, 4th June in that year, re-organized it, and changed the decoration.

On the 1st of January, 1819, the king declared that the knights of this order should exchange the decoration for that of the order of St. George of the Re-union.

The badge is, a star of five points, enamelled red, with golden balls on the points; upon a circular centre or, are three legs, conjoined at the thigh, surrounded with a blue fillet, bearing the words, Felicitate Restituta Kal: Sum: MDCCCXV: between the upper points is a fleur-de-lis, ensigned with the regal crown, both of gold, from the top of which it is suspended by a ring from a red ribbon, with a broad blue border; in the centre of the reverse is a horse, salient to the sinister; and upon the fillet, In Sanguine Fœdus. See Pl. 14, fig. 14. It is worn scarfways from right to left, by the first class; by the second, from the neck; and by the third, from the button-hole.

The premier class likewise wear, on the left side, a silver star of a mullet form, with short rays between the points, terminating in a circular form: in the centre are two chaplets of laurel, conjoined, enclosing a fleur-de-lis, surrounded with a blue fillet, inscribed Pro Virtute Patria. See Pl. 14, fig. 8.

STAR OF THE NOBLE HOUSE, in France, instituted in 1351, by John II. King of France, in imitation of the order of the Garter, then lately established in England. At first, it consisted of thirty knights, including the sovereign, and continued in high esteem for a considerable time; but in the reign of Charles VII. the treasury was so exhausted by the expenses attendant upon the then war with England, that that prince was obliged to have recourse to extraordinary methods of procuring money, and, amongst other expedients, made the sale of this order subservient to that purpose; and being thus prostituted, it fell into disrepute, and was entirely discontinued in the reign of Louis XI. when the order of St. Michael was instituted in its stead.

The ensign of the order was four capital letters,

M · R · A · V, embroidered in gold, within a square; upon the left breast of the knight's garment, between the letters, a mullet of eight points, the point in base wavy and longer than the others: over the mullet, a crown composed of fleurs-de-lis and balls.

The collar was, three rows of gold chains, uniting roses, enamelled white and red, and placed alternately; from one of which was suspended a mullet. See Pl. 12, fig. 16.

The knights were obliged by oath to say daily the third part of the rosary, being fifty Ave-Maries and five Pater-nosters, in honour of the Virgin Mary; and also the following anthem, said to have been composed by the founder of the order.

*Solem Justitiæ, Regem paritura supremum,
 Stella Maria Maris, hodie processit ad ortum.

*Stirps Jesse Virgam produxit, Virgæque florem, Et super hunc florem requiescit spiritus almus.

3

 Sicut Spina Rosam genuit Judæa Mariam,
 Ut vitium virtus operiret, gratia culpam.*

They were to conclude their devotion with a prayer of his wording, for himself and the kings his successors, which, translated, ran thus:—

“Virtue and King of kings, at whose beck the heavens move, the earth stands, and ages roll, grant that King Robert, born of most noble race, may so subdue the haughty, and show mercy to those who submit, that, having reigned here gloriously, he may at length live in heaven. Amen.”

The letters patent of Charles V. King of France, taken from Favin. Lib. III. p. 347.—

“Charles, by the grace of God, King of France. To all such as shall see these our present letters, salutations. We make known that, in regard of the good relation which hath been made unto us concerning the Lords John de Roche-Chouard, and of John de Beaumont, gentlemen of our chamber, we have, this day, (in a good and gracious hour, we hope) given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, of our especial grace and favour, leave, license, and authority, that henceforward they may, and at their pleasure, bear la Royal Estoil in all battles, tournies, and combats, and in all fields, places, feasts, and companies, as they shall think fit to carry the same.

Given at Paris, the 14th day of January, in the year of grace, 1376, and of our reign the eleventh.

STAR, in Sicily, instituted in 1351, after the House of Anjou had been driven out of the kingdom of Naples, and Sicily fell again under the dominion of the King of Arragon. It was established instead of the order of the Crescent, which was then abolished; but in 1394, became extinct.

The badge was, an eight-pointed cross, surmounted upon the centre by a mullet of eight points. See Pl. 13, fig. 4.

The order was composed of sixty knights, all gentlemen of Messina; and the motto was, Monstrant regibus astra viam.

STAR OF OUR LADY, said to have been instituted at Paris, in 1701, by Aniaba, a supposed African king, who had been given as hostage to Louis XIV.

The badge was, a golden mullet, enamelled white, having upon a circular centre the figure of a monarch; but further particulars are unknown.

STARRY CROSS, an Austrian order for ladies, instituted in 1668, by the Empress Eleonora de Gonzaga, to perpetuate the memory of a miraculous preservation of a part of the cross upon which our Saviour suffered, which was discovered uninjured in the ruins, after the conflagration of the imperial palace at Vienna. The empress was grand mistress of the order, into which none but ladies of noble families are admitted, who must devote themselves to the service and adoration of the Holy Cross, and profess the Roman Catholic religion. Pope Clement IX. approved this order by bull, dated 27 July, 1668; and on the 9th September following, the Emperor Leopold I. confirmed the statutes by letters patent. It is called the Society of Noble Ladies of the Starry Cross. The number is unlimited, and the order bestowed at the will of the grand mistress, who must be a princess of the House of Austria. The Archduchess Maria-Louisa, Duchess of Parma, is now grand mistress. The feast of the order is celebrated twice in the year, and the officers are, a prelate, treasurer, secretary, and keeper of the archives.

The badge of the order is, a golden medal, chased and pierced; in the centre, the imperial eagle; over all, a cross, surmounted with the letters I·H·S: and a small cross over the letter H, with the motto, Salus et gloria, at the top of the medal, and over it an imperial crown from which it is suspended by a ring attached to a black ribbon, with a rosette, and worn upon the left breast. SUN AND LION, instituted in 1808, by the Persian Monarch Fith Aly Chah, to reward strangers who may render important services to the state, and as a mark of distinction conferred upon ambassadors, and others of their suite; but into which order Musselmans are not admitted. It is divided into three classes. The badge is a kind of cross of six obtuse points, enamelled white, edged with gold, united at the middle by a wreath: upon a circular centre, is the sun rising. See Pl. 12, fig. 11. This badge is suspended by a ring from a broad red watered ribbon, and worn from the button-hole on the left side, by the third class; but the second wear it from the neck, with a prince's crown on the top of the badge; and the first class suspend the same scarfways from right to left, and likewise wear a star enriched with jewels, of no particular form, but according to the taste of the wearer.

SYDAN This order is, by some writers, attributed to Saladin Master of Brabant, about the year 500; but by others, to a knight of Flanders, named Elie, who had rescued the daughter of the Duke of Cleves from an attack of an enemy, and whom he afterwards married, to perpetuate which event, he instituted this order. The badge is said to have been a swan, enamelled white, upon a green ground or mount, decorated with flowers, which was worn pendent at the breast to a treble row of chains gold. See Pl. 15, fig. 14.

SWORD BEARERS, or KNIGHTS OF THE TWO SWORDS, in Lavonia, sometimes called the Order of Christ, said to have been instituted by Albert, Bishop of Lavonia, about the year 1200, in imitation of the Teutonic knights, for the purpose of extirpating idolatry, and promoting the gospel. The founder prescribed to these knights the Cistercian rule and habit, viz. a long white mantle and black hood, and on the breast, by way of badge, two swords, in saltier, points downward, suspended by the pommels, by a chain attached to a ribbon. See Pl. 15, fig. 11, from whence they were called Brethren Sword Bearers.

The statutes were something like the knights Templars. Pope Innocent III. confirmed the order; but in 1237, it was united to the Teutonic order, and became subject to their rules and habit, until Walter de Pietemberg, the great master, again separated them.

In 1561, Gothard de Ketler, the last great master, became subject to the crown of Poland; and surrendering to King Sigismund II. the city and castle of Riga, with all the lands, charters, privileges, &c. of this order, received in exchange the Dukedom of Courland to him and his heirs for ever; upon which the order became extinct.

SWORD OF CYPRUS. See CYPRUS.

SWORD OF SWEDEN, instituted in 1522, (or, according to some writers, in 1525,) by Gustavus-Vasa, King of Sweden, and revived by Frederick I. 17th April, 1748. Until the reign of Gustavus III. it was only composed of three classes; but that prince added another, called commanders grand crosses, which is now the first class, and is only conferred in the time of war, for some signal victory. According to the statutes of the order, the king cannot attain to that class until, commanding the army, he shall obtain such a victory. The order is bestowed upon naval and military officers for heroic services; and princes of the blood are knights by birth.

The order is composed of four classes, viz. commanders grand crosses, before-mentioned, commanders, knights grand crosses, and knights. The number of each is indefinite; and no one can solicit admission, which, it is considered, would for ever render them unworthy of it. The nomination depends solely on the king, who makes his choice known at a chapter.

Officers of twenty years standing in the time of peace may be made knights: and one campaign is considered equivalent to many years upon a peace establishment: and, to attain either of the two first classes, they must have been previously admitted into the junior class, and hold the rank of colonel, at least.

top of which it is suspended by a ring from a yellow ribbon, edged with blue. See Pl. 13, fig. 7. It is worn scarfways from right to left. The first class likewise wear, upon the left side, a silver embroidered star, formed like the badge, omitting the regal crown, and having on the centre a sword, erect, argent, hilt and pommel or, between three ducal crowns of the last. See Pl. 13, fig. 9.

The third class, or knights grand crosses, wear a similar badge to the first, but with swords, in saltier, above the ducal coronets in the principal angles; the circular centre being charged with a sword between three ducal crowns, as on the centre of the star before described. See Pl. 13, fig. 7. This badge is worn suspended from the neck.

The fourth class, or knights, wear a similar badge from the button-hole, but somewhat smaller. Upon particular ceremonial days, the badge is suspended to a collar of gold, composed of swords, sword-belts, and the guards of swords, conjoined by chains; on the sword-guard is enamelled a helmet, blue. See Pl. 13, fig. 16.

TABLE, ROUND. See ROUND TABLE.

TEMPLARS, instituted in 1119, by Hugh de Paganis and Godfrey de St. Amor, who, with seven gentlemen, went to the Holy Land, and formed themselves into a brotherhood, for the protection of pilgrims resorting to the Holy Sepulchre, acting in concert with the Hospitalers against the Infidels, and guarding the Temple of Solomon; Baldwin II. King of Jerusalem, having, for their encouragement, assigned them lodgings in his palace adjoining, from which they were called Knights Templars.

Notwithstanding the assistance they received from Baldwin and the patriarch Guarimond, they were, for the first nine years, under the necessity of accepting the charitable donations of well-disposed persons. Pope Honorius, at the request of Stephen, Patriarch of Jerusalem, prescribed for them an order of life, whereby they were to wear a white garment, to which Pope Eugenius added a red cross. They made their vows in the presence of the before-mentioned patriarch, which were in obedience, poverty, and chastity, and to live under the rule of the regular canons of St. Augustine. When they were at war, their banner was the one-half white, and the other black, signifying, white and fair to Christians, but black and terrible to their enemies.

According to Dugdale, the Knights Templars wore linen coifs, (like the serjeants-at-law,) and red caps close over them; and on their bodies, shirts of mail, and swords girded on with a broad belt; over all they had a white cloak, reaching to the ground, with a cross on their left shoulder: they used to wear their beards of a great length, although most other orders shaved.

The Templars became numerous, and famous in enterprise by sea and land against the Infidels, and were highly favoured by the Christian princes, who assigned them great revenues. In process of time, they became exceedingly wealthy and powerful; and, joining the pope, withdrew themselves from the obedience of the Patriarch of Jerusalem; but under their new master, being charged with some infamous crimes, their lands and possessions were seized upon and confiscated, their order suppressed, and they themselves imprisoned, condemned, and cruelly executed, unjustly, according to the opinions of many authors, merely as a pretext to gain their vast revenues, which Dr. Heylin states to have been not less than sixteen thousand lordships in Europe.

Dugdale states, that the first settlement of this order in England, was in Holborn, in London; but their chief residence, in the reign of Henry II. was the Temple, in Fleet Street, which was erected by them, and the church, (built after the form of the Temple at Jerusalem) dedicated to God and our blessed Lady, by Heraclius, Patriarch of Jerusalem, in 1185.

On Wednesday after the feast of Epiphany, in 1367, 1st of Edward II. by the king's special command, and a bull from the pope, the Knights Templars were generally throughout England taken and thrown into prison; and, in a general council held in London, being convicted of various impieties, all their possessions were seized into the king's hands.

The order was condemned in a general council at Vienna, under Pope Clement V. in 1311; and by a general decree of the same pope, in the seventh year of his papacy, they were annexed and incorporated with the knights hospitalers.

The badge of the order was, a patriarchal cross, enamelled red, and edged with gold, worn at the breast pendent to a ribbon. See Pl. 14, fig. 4.

TEUTONIC ORDER, or KNIGHTS OF THE HOLY CROSS.

This Prussian order is said to have originated in the piety of a German and his wife, who, in the time of the Holy War, lived in Jerusalem, and built there an hospital for the reception and maintenance of such pilgrims as were their own countrymen; and to which hospital, by the permission of the Patriarch of Jerusalem, they afterwards added an oratory, dedicated to the Holy Virgin. Soon after, several German gentlemen contributed towards the enlargement of this charitable foundation; and, in 1191, they were joined by several merchants adventurers, who came from the Hanseatic towns of Bremen and Lubeck; whereupon, at the joint expense, they erected a most sumptuous hospital at Acre, and assumed the title of Teutonic Knights, or Brethren of the Hospital of Our Lady of the Germans at Jerusalem. Pope Celestine III. gave them permission to elect a chief from amongst their own members; whereupon they unanimously nominated Henry de Wallpott, a person descended from an ancient and noble family, who, in 1191, had become a professed monk of the order of St. Augustine, and whose lineal descendants became reigning Counts of Passenheim; and the chief of that House is always a knight of the Teutonic Order.

These knights wore a white mantle, and had for their badge, which was worn at the breast, a cross potent sable, charged with another cross double potent or, surcharged with an escutcheon of the empire, the principal cross surmounted by a chief azure, semée of France. See Pl. 12, fig. 15.

The original badge assigned by the Emperor Henry VI. was a cross potent sable, to which John, King of Jerusalem, added the cross double potent gold; the Emperor Frederick gave them the imperial eagle; and St.

to return thanks to God and his apostle for the victory, making a vow, that they and their posterity would bear the figure of that cross upon their ensigns and banners. The place where this battle was fought, in Northumberland; and it still retains the name of Athelstane's Ford.

Favin, in his Théâtre d'Honneur, says, that Achais instituted this order on account of the famous league, offensive and defensive, concluded by him with Charles, in the reign of Charles VII. King of France, when the unity was renewed between both kingdoms; and Nisbet gives the year 1500, as the period of its institution.

This order was revived in 1540, by James V. of Scotland, who had received from the Emperor Charles V. in 1534, the order of the Golden Fleece; in 1535, that of St. Michael, from Francis I. King of France; and in the year following, also that of the Garter, from Henry VIII. King of England, to commemorate which, he kept open court, and solemnized the several feasts of St. Andrew, the Golden Fleece, St. Michael, and St. George; and set up the arms of these sovereign princes, encircled with their respective orders, over the gate of his palace at Linlithgow, together with the order of the Thistle, or St. Andrew, as a mark of the high estimation in which he held these orders.

The sudden death of James V. of Scotland, the rebellion against Queen Mary, and the troubles which ensued in Scotland, nearly extinguished the order, which was greatly neglected, until again revived by King James II. of England and VII. of Scotland, who assigned the Royal Chapel at Holyrood-House, to be the chapel of the order, which, by his majesty's direction, was repaired for the purpose, having a fine organ, with stalls for the sovereign and knights-brethren, and their respective banners hang over them.

On the 29th of May, 1687, the king issued his warrant for letters patent to be made out and passed, per statutum, under the great seal of the Thistle; and, at the same time, renewing the order of statutes and ordinances for and regulating a body of statutes and ordinances, inter alia, "That the habit of the sovereign and twelve brethren should be a doublet and trunk-hose of cloth of silver, and silver garters and shoe-strings; the breeches and stockings of pearl-coloured silk, white leather shoes, blue and silver garters and shoe-strings; the sleeves of the doublet decently garnished with silver and blue ribbons; a surcoat of purple velvet, lined with white taffeta, girt about the middle with a purple sword-belt, edged with gold, and a buckle of gold, at which a sword, with a gilded hilt, whereof the shell to be in form of a badge of the order, and the pommel in the form of a thistle, in a scabbard of purple velvet, should be placed. That over all should be worn a mantle or robe of green velvet, lined with white taffeta, with tassels of gold and green, the whole robe parsemine, or powdered over with thistles of gold; and that upon the left shoulder of such mantle should be embroidered, in a blue field, the image of St. Andrew the apostle, bearing before him the cross of his martyrdom of silver embroidery, should be placed. That over all should be borne the collar of the order, consisting of thistles and sprigs of rue going betwixt; that in the middle thereof, and in the front, should hang the St. Andrew, in gold enamel, with his gown green, and

... the Duke of Sambia, invited the Teutonic knights, and assigned to them the territory ... built the towns of Elbing, Marienburgh, Thorn, and Königsburg, and at length subdued Livonia. This prosperity was not, however, of long continuance. The order became divided against itself; and the kings of Poland, benefitted by their dissension, Prussia revolted, and Casimer IV. received the homage of the knights. At length Albert, Marquess of Brandenburg, grand master of the order, abjured the Roman Catholic religion, abdicated the grand mastership, subdued Prussia, and expelled such of the knights as refused to follow his example, and who retired to Marienland, in Franconia. It was once the most powerful order in the universe; but became divided into two branches: the first, for Roman Catholics, who take the oath of celibacy, and had a house at Mergensheim, in Germany, wherein their affairs were transacted. The badge of this branch was, a cross potent sable, thereon a cross thury or; over all, on the centre, an escutcheon gold, charged with an imperial black eagle. See Pl. 12, fig. 13. This badge was worn round the neck, pendant to a gold chain.

The other, or second branch of the order, had a house at Utrecht, in which the secretary resided; and as the ceremony of admission into this branch was somewhat singular, it may not be altogether unworthy of remark. The nobles of Holland who proposed a war, went to Utrecht, and entered his name upon the register, paying a large sum of money for the use of the order; and the person thus registered succeeded by the order: and the person thus registered succeeded in his rotation. When a knight died, the order was transmitted to attend the chapter, and was by his name in struck out of the list.

The badge of this branch was, a cross potent, enamel, and white, surrounded with another, sable; above the cross was a ball, encircled white and black. See Pl. 12, fig. 14. It was worn pendant to a broad black watered ribbon round the neck.

The name cross was likewise embroidered on the left hand of the upper habit of each knight. The badge of the order of Malta, that of the Teutonic knights, chaplains, and serving brothers. The treaty of Westburgh, bearing date 26th Decem- ber, 1180, the grand mastership of this order is attached to the imperial House of Austria. This most ancient order, according to John Ledy, Bishop of Ross, in the history of Scotland, had its origin in a bright cross, the form of that wherever St. Andrew the apostle appeared, which appeared in the heavens to Constantine, King of the Saxons, and Hungus, King of the Goths, the night before the battle fought between them at Mulsano. King of England, as they were upon their knees at prayer, when St. Andrew, their tutelary saint, is said also to have appeared, and promised to deliver them from their enemies, if they would be victorious when they next appeared. The next day these kings gained a complete victory, and afterwards went, in consequence of their promise, to the Kirk of St. Andrew, the surcoat purple, having before him the cross of his martyrdom, enamelled white; or, if of diamonds, consisting of the number of just thirteen; the cross and feet of St. Andrew resting upon a ground of green; and that the collar should be tied to the shoulders of the robe with a white ribbon. That on the days of solemn procession or feasting, where the sovereign himself is present, or his commissioner for that effect, the knights at these times of permission should wear upon their heads a cap of black velvet, faced up with a border of the same, a little divided before, wide and loose in the crown, having a large plume of white feathers, with a black aigrette, or heron's top in the middle of it, and the border of the cap to be adorned with jewels. That the sovereign's cap, for difference, should have two rows of diamonds across the crown thereof, in form of a royal crown. That the sovereign's robes should be of a length proportionable to his royal dignity, and the badge on the shoulder adorned with pearl, beside such other distinctions as he should think fit to appoint."

The same statutes then take notice, "That it was the ancient custom for the sovereign and knights brethren, on their daily appearance, to wear the jewel of the order in a chain of gold, or precious stones; and that the use of ribbons had been brought in since the most noble order of the Thistle was left off: and that chains are not now in use; and therefore they ordain and appoint the jewel of the said order to be worn with a purple blue ribbon, watered or tabbled. The jewel to have on the one side the image of St. Andrew, with the cross of his martyrdom before him, enamelled as above, or enriched with precious stones on the cross and round about; and on the back thereof, in enamel, on a blue ground, a thistle of gold and green, the flower reddish; with a motto written round it, Nemo me impune lacessit."

Lastly, these statutes direct, "That upon the left breast of the coat and cloak of each knight, shall be a badge of proportionable bigness, being St. Andrew's cross of silver embroidery, having on the middle thereof a circle of gold, thereon the motto of the order, in letters of blue; and on the centre thereof a thistle of gold upon a blue field."

In consequence of this revival, several new knights were created, and the order continued to flourish during the remainder of King James II.'s reign: but on his abdication, and the advancement of King William to the throne, the order was again laid aside, and continued dormant till the reign of Queen Anne, when the following statutes passed under the royal signet and sign manual for its revival, since which it has continued to flourish.

Statutes and Orders of the most ancient Order of the Thistle, revived by her majesty Anne, by the grace of God, Queen of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, Sovereign of the said Order, for the better regulating the proceedings and solemnities thereof, in all the circumstances thereunto belonging.

In the first place, we think fit to continue the ancient number of knights, to wit, twelve brethren, with ourself the sovereign of the said most noble order, to be the precise number of that order in all time coming:

That the sovereign's habit be such as they shall think fit at any time hereafter to appoint. That the habit of the brethren of this order be a doublet and trunk, hose, cap, &c. as before described, with this difference, that the field and the motto be green instead of blue, with rays going out betwixt the points of the cross. The jewel of the said order to be worn at a green ribbon over the left shoulder, cross the body, and tied under the right arm.

That her majesty and her royal successors, sovereigns of the said most ancient and most noble order of the Thistle, shall, in all time coming, wear the said order on the ribbon of the order of the Garter, or otherwise, in any manner that her majesty shall think fit, and shall wear the collar of the said order on the day of the feast of St. Andrew, being 30th November, yearly.

That the knights brethren of the said order shall wear their collars on all collar days, wherever the sovereign is, and within Scotland, by obligations, upon all days of public solemnities, whether the sovereign be there or not.

That the collar days be the same ordinary collar days now observed by her majesty. That the collar, with the St. Andrew belonging to it, and the medal of the order, given by her majesty and successors, sovereigns of the said order, to the knights brethren thereof at their admission, be returned at their deaths to the sovereign.

The order is to have a great seal in the custody of the chancellor thereof, having on the dexter side St. Andrew's cross, and on the sinister the arms of Great Britain, as they are carried by us in Scotland, encircled with the collar of the order, having the image of St. Andrew hanging at it, with the motto of the order round the seal. On the other side, the image of St. Andrew, bearing the cross before him, with a glory round his head, written round, Magnum sigillum antiquissimi et nobilissimi ordinis Cardui.

That there be a secretary of the order, to transmit the sovereign's orders to the knights brethren, and that he attend her royal person for that effect. He shall have, on days of solemnity, a mantle of green satin, lined with white; on the left shoulder of which the badge of St. Andrew's cross. His ordinary badge is to be hung in a chain of gold, being a thistle of gold and green, upon two pens crossed saltierways, with the motto round about it, and an imperial crown upon the top. The lion shall have robes and badges upon the shoulder, conform to the secretary; in his hand his staff of office, and about his neck his badge, with the St. Andrew turned outward. The usher conforms to the secretary in all things, except his badge, which is to be two sprigs of rue, in form of St. Andrew's cross, vert, upon a white ground, upon which is a thistle of gold; and round it, the motto, upon which is an imperial crown; and in his hand the baton of his office.

Before any can be admitted to the most noble order of the Thistle, he must be a knight bachelor.

Here follows the form of the oath to be taken by all, as shall be admitted into this order as brethren.

"I shall fortify and defend the true reformed Protestant religion, and Christ's most holy Evangel, to the uttermost of my power. I shall be loyal and true to my Sovereign Lady the Queen, Sovereign of this most ancient and most noble order of the Thistle. I shall maintain and defend the statutes, privileges, and honours of the said order. I shall never bear any treason about in my

ORDERS OF KNIGHTHOOD.

... ... our Sovereign Lady the Queen, but shall answer in case to her. So help me God."

The oath being taken by the elect knights, before whom the sovereign shall appoint, they may actually wear the badge and other ornaments belonging to the order: and in regard we have not as yet named a person to be chancellor of the said order, and that there is no great seal belonging thereto, we do therefore ordain that our signet of the said order, which is to be in the custody of our secretary to the said order, shall serve for any warrant or order that we shall think fit to grant or cause, for the nominating any of the knights brethren or officers, or any other thing relating to the said order.

The royal chapel of our palace of Holyrood-House, to be the chapel of the order in time coming. That no alteration of the habit, jewel, collar, badge, or other ornaments, belonging to the said order, or of the using or wearing of them, be offered to her majesty by any of the brethren, without a concurrence of the major part of them. Given under our royal hand and signet of our court, at St. James's, the 31st day of December, 1703. Year of our reign the second. A. R.

By her majesty's command,
"CROMERTIE."

"A. R.

"We do hereby order and require all who are, or shall be admitted, as knights brethren of the most ancient and most noble order of the Thistle, to pay the fees according to the above distribution, upon their being admitted to the said order. Given under our royal hand and signet of the said order, at our court of St. James's, the 20th day of October, 1705, and of our reign the 4th year. This is a true copy of the statutes and orders signed by her majesty, examined and compared with the originals by me,

"DAVID NAIRN, Sec. nob. ord. Cardui."

King George I. on 17th of February, 1714--15, was pleased to confirm the statutes signed by Queen Anne, as above mentioned, with the addition of several more, amongst which, was that of adding rays of glory to surround the whole figure of St. Andrew, which hangs at the collar; and though, from the time of the Reformation to the year 1714--15, both elections and instalments had been discontinued, with his majesty was graciously pleased to ordain for the future, that chapters of election should be held in his royal presence; to which end he ordered the great wardrobe to provide the knights brethren and officers of the order with such mantles as the statutes of the said order appointed. It was likewise declared, that the thistle in the middle of the star to be worn on the coat or cloak, be green, heightened with gold, upon a field of the same metal, and that the circle round the thistle and field be green, and the motto in letters of gold.

The collar, which the knights wear upon the day of their grand feast and other extraordinary occasions, is made of gold, consisting of thistles and sprigs of rue, enamelled vert, (being the two ancient symbols of the Scots and Picts,) appendant to which is the image of St. Andrew, irradiated, bearing before him the cross of his martyrdom. See Pl. 12, fig. 5 and 8.

The star is a cross saltier, surmounted by a star of four points, all of silver, adorned upon the centre with a green fillet, bordured with gold, and lettered of the same, containing this motto, Nemo me impune lacesset; and in the centre is a thistle proper, heightened with gold, upon a field of the same metal. See Pl. 12, fig. 6.

The ordinary insignia worn by the knights is the star, which is embroidered on their left breast, a green ribbon over their left shoulder, (like the knights of the Garter,) appendant to which is the jewel, bearing the image of St. Andrew, with his cross before him, in a circle of gold, enamelled vert, with the motto of the order. See Pl. 12, fig. 9.

The knights are never installed now; but the ceremony of investiture is as follows:

On the day appointed for the investiture, his majesty signs the several instruments for that purpose, which are generally presented to the sovereign by the gentleman-usher of the green rod, in the absence of the secretary of the order. The new knight is then called into the royal presence, being preceded by one or two of the knights companions, and supported on each side by a knight companion, one of the Scotch heralds (supplying the place of the gentleman-usher of the green rod) carrying the sword of state.

At the entrance, a low reverence is made, a second about the middle, and on being advanced up to the sovereign, a third.

The new knight being presented by the two supporters, and kneeling down, the herald draws the sword, and, kneeling, delivers it to the sovereign, who thereupon confers the honour of knighthood upon the newly-elected companion, who kisses his majesty's hand; green-rod then administers the oath, and having received the ensigns of the order, kneeling, presents the same to the sovereign, upon a velvet cushion, who puts the ribbon over the left shoulder of the newly-elected knight, companion, upon which he has again the honour of kissing his majesty's hand; after this the knight rises, and, making a low reverence, withdraws in the same manner as he entered.

The number of knights of this order was increased from twelve to sixteen, by royal warrant of his present majesty, George IV. at his coronation.

THISTLE OF BOURBON. See OUR LADY.

THREE GOLDEN FLEECES, instituted by the Emperor Napoleon of France, 15th of August, 1809. It was to have been composed of one hundred grand knights, four hundred commanders, and one thousand knights; the imperial prince alone being a knight by birth; and princes of the blood were not to be admitted until they had served one campaign, or completed two years service in the imperial army. Grand dignitaries and ministers, after having conservé le portefeuille for six years, and ministers of the state, after twenty years service, were to have been entitled to this order. No other persons were to be admitted unless engaged in warfare, in which they had been thrice wounded; and to obtain the rank of grand knight, they must have had a chief command, or been engaged in some general action in the imperial, or grand army. The decoration of commander was to have been conferred upon captains, lieutenants, and sub-lieutenants, of regiments forming such army, and who had distinguished themselves by their bravery. The insignia of knight was to be given to sub-officers and soldiers, for heroic conduct.

The Emperor was to have been grand master, and to nominate the knights on the 15th of August, annually, in an assembly of the grand knights; but the nomination never took place, and the decorations, which were to have been worn around the neck by the grand knights only, and from the button-hole by the commanders and knights, were not determined upon.

TOWER AND SWORD, an order of Portugal, first instituted in 1459, by Alphonso V. who created twenty-seven knights, the number of years which he had attained when he took the possession of Fez from the Moors.

The prince regent, under the name of John VI. restored this order at Rio de Janeiro, 8th November, 1808, upon the removal of the royal family, and the consequent change of the seat of government to the Brazils.

The king assigned to this order all the privileges and prerogatives granted to other orders; and it was designed to recompense the services and fidelity of Portuguese, as well as strangers, during the war in support of the kingdom.

The sovereign is grand master; the prince royal, grand commander; other princes are grand crosses; and the members are divided into two classes, the one effective, the other honorary. The number of effective commanders is eight; but the number of honorary commanders, as well as knights, is indefinite.

The endowment of this order consists in the concession of lands made to it in the kingdom of Brazil.

The badge is of gold, formed of a circular band, surmounted by a star of seven points, the eighth, or upper point, being covered with a tower, from the top of which it is suspended by a ring from a broad purple watered ribbon; on the centre of the badge is a wreath or crown of laurel, ensiled with a sword or cutlass, paleways, the blade being somewhat curved, surrounded with a fillet, upon which is inscribed, Valor e lealdade. See Pl. 13, fig. 5. It is worn by the grand crosses and commanders scarfways from right to left; and from the button-hole by the knights.

The grand crosses and commanders likewise wear a silver star of sixteen points, or double Maltese cross, the centre the same as the badge, the wreath of laurel vert, the sword argent, pommel and hilt gold, the fillet azure, edged with, and having the motto in letters of gold; upon the top of the fillet a tower of the same metal, projecting above the upper limb of the star. See Pl. 13, fig. 8.

TRUXILLO, a Spanish order, which received its appellation from the city of that name, but the time of its institution is uncertain. Guillim mentions the order to have existed in 1227; for one Don Arias Perez Dallego, then master of the order, took the city of Truxillo from the Moors, and there settled a brotherhood of knights and priests; but the badge, habit, and the rules observed by them are unknown. Favin says the brotherhood of Truxillo joined with the order of Alcantara, by which means the memory of this order is lost.

TUNIS, ORDER OF, supposed to have been founded by Charles V. in 1535, at the time when he re-established Muley Hassan on the throne of Tunis.

The badge was, a cross saltier raguly, vert, enriched upon the centre with precious stones, suspended from a collar of gold, TUSIN, an Austrian order; but the time of its institution and the founder are both uncertain, although it is generally supposed that the Emperor Albert II. founded it 1562. The knights of this order are by some authors called Hungarian knights. The badge was, a plain cross, embroidered in green on the left breast of the knights' mantle, which was red.

VASA, or WASA, a Swedish order, instituted in May, 1772, by Gustavus III. King of Sweden, the day of his coronation, to recompense artists, agriculturists, merchants, and manufacturers.

The title is a Swedish word, signifying sheaf, and is likewise the name of a very ancient family, from which Gustavus I. descended, who came to the throne in 1523, the sheaf being a part of the family bearings.

The order is composed of three classes, viz. six grand crosses, the king and the chancellor included, eight commanders, and fifty knights, in which number strangers are not included. The first pay 800 rixdollars, as fees of honour, and the commanders one-half of that sum; but the junior knights are exempt, the king discharging all their fees.

The king, as grand master, nominates the knights; and persons may be admitted into the first class without previous admission into either of the others: and it seldom happens that those of the third class gain promotion.

The collar of the order is of gold, richly chased and enamelled, composed of four garbs, or wheat-sheaves, eight shields of the arms of Sweden, (viz. azure, three ducal crowns or,) each regally crowned, and embellished with two caducei and as many cornucopiæ reversed, and four of the arms of Holstein, (viz. a shield, per fesse, argent and gules) between three nettle-leaves and as many passion-nails, all white, the whole joined with small chains of gold; to the centre is pendant a medal of gold, chased and pierced with a garb, as in the collar, encompassed with a fillet gules, inscribed, Gustaf. Den. Tredie. Instiktare, MDCCLXXII. See Pl. 15, fig. 12. This badge, upon ordinary occasions, is attached to a broad green watered ribbon, and is worn scarfways by the grand crosses; and by the commanders and knights from the neck.

The grand crosses and commanders likewise wear, on the left side, a silver embroidered star of eight points; in the four angles, the arms of Holstein, as in the collar; and on the centre of the star a garb, ensigned with the regal crown of Sweden.

The chancellor, the treasurer, the secretary, and the master of the ceremonies of the order of the Seraphim, are attached to this order, in the same capacities.

WHITE EAGLE, an order in Poland, generally acknowledged to have been instituted in 1325, by Uladialaus V. surnamed Loctius, upon the marriage of his son, Cassimir the Great, with Anne, daughter of the Duke of Lithuania; but, from its short duration, no mention is made of it, not even by the historians of Poland. It was revived by Augustus, the second king of Poland, and Elector of Saxony, in 1705, to conciliate and attach to his interest the Polish nobility, whom he feared might favour the cause of Stanislaus, his competitor.

Upon its revival, it was held in high estimation, and was conferred on the Czar, Peter the Great, and Grand Duke of Russia, and all the principal nobility of Poland.

The badge of the order is, a gold cross of eight points, enamelled white; in the four principal angles are four large diamonds, in the midst of rays of gold: the cross on one side surmounted with a white Polish eagle, beak and claws of gold; and upon the other, or reverse, the king's cipher, with the motto, Pro fide, rege, et lege: the badge ensigned with an imperial crown, and which, upon ordinary occasions, is worn pendent to a broad sky-blue watered ribbon, scarfways over the right shoulder, and under the left arm; but upon great festivals it is attached to a collar, composed of double links of gold and eagles in white enamel. The knights also wear, on the left side of their outer garment, an eight-pointed star, of gold embroidery, the four central rays or points being somewhat longer than the others; and upon this star is embroidered, in relief, a cross pattée in silver, bordured red, bearing the motto, Pro fide, rege, et lege, in letters of gold, disposed upon the four limbs, from the principal angles of which issue as many rays of silver. For collar, badge, and star, see Pl. 14, fig. 9 and 10.

The robes, which were assigned by the first founder, consisted of a sky-blue velvet mantle, lined with white satin, upon which was at first embroidered a white eagle, which was afterwards removed, and the star embroidered in its place. Under this mantle they wore a long surcoat of ponceau-coloured velvet, lined with white satin, with a cap, after the fashion of Poland, made of the same velvet.

When Poland ceased to exist as a sovereign state, the order was for a time discontinued; but when the Emperor Napoleon created the Duchy of Warsaw, in the Constitutional Act of the 21st July, 1807, the Polish orders of knighthood were revived, and the King of Saxony declared Duke of Warsaw, and grand master of them.

Since its submission to Russia, the orders of knighthood have been continued, and the Emperor Alexander is now grand master of this and the other Polish orders. It is composed of only one class, who are likewise knights of the order of St. Stanislaus.

WHITE ELEPHANT, an order of Denmark, founded according to some historians, by Canute, the fourth King of Denmark, in 1190, when he marched in person against the Pagans, and it is said to have been renewed by Christian I. A. D. 1458; but the chronicles of the kingdom assert that it was instituted, in 1478, by Christian I. to commemorate and celebrate the nuptials of Prince John, his son, with the Princess Christiana, a daughter of the elector of Saxony; since which period it has flourished, undiminished in splendour, and is considered to rank with the first orders of knighthood in Europe.

The number of knights is limited to thirty, besides the royal family, who are born knights of the order, but not admitted into it until they attain the age of twenty years; other knights must be thirty years of age before admission; all profess the Lutheran religion, and have been, at least, for eight days, knights of the order of Danebrog, although no other decoration can be worn with that of the elephant. The knights must not appear without the insignia of the order, under the penalty of twenty ducats. These statutes are not, however, rigorously enforced, as there are now fifty knights, and most of them wear the order of Danebrog in addition.

Since 1808, the principal festival is on the 1st of January, but which was formerly observed on the third day of Pentecost.

The collar of the order was, at first, composed of elephants and crosses, linked together; and from thence was suspended an image of the Virgin Mary, surrounded with glory, and holding the infant Jesus in her arms. But this badge and collar were afterwards changed, and the badge is now an elephant of gold and white enamel, with tusks and trunk of gold; on the back a tower, or castle, and upon the side of the elephant a cross of Danebrog, in diamonds. Upon the neck of the animal, is seated a Moor, in black enamel, holding in his right hand a spear of gold. See Pl. 14, fig. 7. This badge is suspended from a double gold ring; and upon ordinary occasions, attached to a rich broad sky-blue-coloured watered ribbon, worn scarfways over the right shoulder; but upon great festivals, it is worn upon the breast, suspended from the great collar of gold, composed of elephants and towers, placed alternately, the elephants being enamelled white, with tusks and trunks of gold, all linked together by a double row of chains. See Pl. 14, fig. 12.

Upon the left side of the upper garment, the knights likewise wear a star of eight points, embroidered in silver, the four central points being somewhat longer than the angular ones; in the centre, an escutcheon of ponceau-coloured velvet, upon which is embroidered a cross of silver, the lower part of which is longer than the other three; this is surrounded with a laurel crown, bordered with a narrow silver edging; and a fillet of silver encircles the whole. See Pl. 14, fig. 11.

The robes of ceremony consist of a long ample mantle of crimson velvet, lined with white satin, the train of which is two yards long, and a knightly hood hangs down behind; the mantle is tied with tassels of silver and red silk intermixed. The vest and small clothes are of white satin, and the stockings of a pearl-colour. Upon the left side of the mantle, is embroidered the star before described. The hat is of black velvet, adorned with two rows of white ostrich's feathers.

The king's mantle, as sovereign of the order, is lined with ermine, and a black plume of heron's feathers is placed in the midst of the white ones, by way of distinction; but it is the only difference perceptible between those of the sovereign and those of the knights companions. The motto of the order is, Magni animi pretium.

WHITE FALCON, or OF VIGILANCE, founded the 2nd of August, 1732, by Ernest Augustus, Duke of Saxe-Weimar, to the end that those who were invested therewith might be encouraged, and disposed to avoid all manner of vice, and to exercise and maintain that virtue which is the chief object all orders of knighthood must especially have in view; and secondly, that the knights so invested should observe the strictest fidelity towards the Emperor of Germany, as the supreme chief of the Holy Roman empire, in honour of whom this order was purposely instituted. Those persons who are not under the guidance and governance of such principles cannot be admitted as knights companions.

The badge consisted of an eight-pointed gold cross, enamelled green, and thereon was disposed a falcon of white enamel, its beak and talons of gold; between the four principal angles of the cross were rays, enamelled red, with the extremities of white enamel. The reverse of the cross is enamelled white, and the rays between the angles green; in the centre was the duke's name, represented by a cipher of E. A. upon blue enamel, surrounded with military trophies of gold, and upon the cross was the title of the order, L'Ordre de la Vigilance, and the motto, Vigilando ascendimus.

The badge was surmounted by the ducal crown, by which it was suspended from a dark red, or ponceau-coloured ribbon, with a narrow embroidery of gold, and worn round the neck.

The reason assigned for its appellation of the White Falcon, was, that the founder had especially in view the imperial eagle, which particularly decorates and characterises the arms of the emperor, and he was desirous that the knights companions of this order should adhere as faithfully to its interests, and to those of the august chief of the empire, as those birds are wont to adhere to and accompany each other; the falcon emblematically representing the candour, attachment, and vigilance of the knights companions towards their founder or grand master, upon every occasion.

The five principal vows were as follow:—

1. Each knight shall be faithful to God his Almighty Creator.

2. He must bind himself, as much as lies in his power, to practise every virtue, and to avoid all manner of vice.

3. He must endeavour to promote the prosperity and glory of the emperor; and, circumstances rendering it necessary and indispensable so to do, he must sacrifice even his blood and fortune to that end.

4. The knights companions shall live together in peace, harmony, fraternal concord, and unceasing amity; and upon all needful occasions they shall administer due assistance to each other.

5. They shall not neglect the poor and helpless, particularly distressed officers and soldiers who are in a state of indigence.

The number of knights companions shall amount to twenty-four. This number shall be divided into princes, persons of high and illustrious birth, persons of ancient and honourable equestrian families, who are entrusted with eminent offices and employments in the civil or military line, and of gentlemen, who are of such noble descent, as, according to the princes of ancient chivalry, entitles them to measure their lances with those of the most renowned knights, and to dispute the prize in the justs and combats of tilt and tournament.

When this order was instituted, it was solemnly and expressly ordained that, after the death of the founder, the serene chief of the Weimarian branch of the House of Saxony, shall never change or alter any of those rules which were then established, as already mentioned; and, in case this branch should become extinct, then is the future successor of any other branch most earnestly supplicated and conjured inviolably to preserve and maintain the original statutes and regulations in their full force, entire vigour, and pristine virtue.

The feast day shall be kept annually upon that day which is observed as the anniversary, or birth-day of the reigning emperor; and each knight companion (although he cannot assist or be present at the ceremonies, which are practised on this occasion) shall be, nevertheless bound to the due observance thereof, by a performance of such works as tend "to the glory of God in the highest, peace on the earth, and good will towards men."

As soon as a knight companion dies, his heirs must immediately notify that circumstance, and, without loss of time, transmit the ensigns of the deceased to the reigning duke.

A chancellor and a secretary are the principal officers of this order; to the end and intent that all transactions relating thereto may be regularly registered, and that all acts and instruments respecting this equestrian body be ultimately deposited in the archives destined for that purpose.

The premier minister of Saxe-Weimar shall always be invested with the office and dignity of chancellor, provided he can prove that he is of equestrian descent and extraction.

Extract from the Statutes of the Order, translated from the Original, in Latin.

The form of the insignia will clearly appear from the account affixed to the beginning of the statutes, and the description of them may be read in the constitutions hereto annexed; but we cannot so far pass over the memorable symbol of the Order Vigilando Ascendimus, as not to submit it to examination in a few words. The statutes seek their application from the very nature of the hawk, or principal symbol of our order, it being known to the amateurs of falconry that the hawk is always a faithful attendant of the eagle, and endeavours, with the greatest efforts, to follow in his flight that king of birds, as he is commonly called.

Perpetual praise is therefore due to this imitation, kept up in this august order, by which the princes of the empire, and its other most faithful vassals, endeavour earnestly to follow the imperial eagle; and at the same time declare, with suitable expressions of veneration, their constant feeling of sincerity. For what can be conceived more glorious, than that so many powerful members of the body of German princes should emulously desire to be the hawk's attendant on the Romano German eagle; at once his indefatigable, and if it should appear necessary, strenuous defenders? Follow, therefore, all ye princes of the empire, equally the prop and ornament of Germany, the heroic example of the Saxe-Weimar hero, and defend the most august imperial eagle, against the most illustrious Duke of the King of France, and every

... with the same expectations, not only in
... but also more certain
... as the ...

... as the most worthy reward of a great mind, never to decay!
Weimar, August 2nd, 1732.

For twenty years, prior to 1815, the order was not conferred on any one; and in the beginning of that year there remained but one single knight. After the Congress of Vienna, the dukes of Saxe-Weimar having received an increase of territory, the Grand Duke Charles Augustus renewed the order 18th October, 1815, and made it the reward of civil and military merit, dividing it into three classes, viz. grand crosses, commanders, and knights. The first class is composed of the grand master, who is always the reigning grand duke, the princes of his family, and twelve other grand crosses, chosen from amongst major-generals and actual privy-councillors ; the second class is limited to twenty-five, who must have the rank of privy-councillors or majors ; and the third class consists of fifty knights.

The cross or badge is worn by the grand crosses pen-dant from a broad ribbon scarfways over the right shoulder, and by the commanders round the neck ; the knights wearing the same badge from the button-hole.
The civil members, instead of the trophies upon the centre of the badge, have a crown of laurel surrounding the middle device.

The grand crosses likewise wear, on the left breast, a silver star of eight points, formed like feathers, upon which is a cross pattée azure, surmounted with a falcon, upon rays of gold, in the centre, encircled with a green fillet, bearing the motto, Vigilando ascendimus, in letters of gold. See Pl. 15, fig. 5.

WING OF ST. MICHAEL, instituted in 1172, by Alphonso, King of Portugal, to commemorate a victory which he gained over the Moors, and from a superstitious belief that it was achieved by the interposition of St. Michael.
The badge was, a cross flory, fitchée, gules, cantoned in base with two fleurs-de-lis; and over the cross, upon an escroll, the motto, Quis ut Deus? See Pl. 15, fig. 13.

The habit of the order was of white silk, on the left breast whereof was embroidered a wing purple, within a circle of rays of gold.

Note.—As the arms of Abbeys, Monasteries, &c. generally speaking, appear to be the same with those of their respective founders, we cannot be surprised at finding two, and sometimes more of them, bearing the same arms. Indeed, to some of them, religious bearings have been added, as croziers, mitres, &c. in order to vary them from those of other religious houses, which had been founded or endowed by one and the same person; notwithstanding which, they clearly appear to have been originally the same.

ADMIRALTY OFFICE, [London] hath not any armorial ensign. The seal of office is, an anchor in pale, with a cable passing from the ring, and environing the stock and fluke; the whole circumscribed with the following legend, Signil. offi. admiral. Magnæ Britan. &c. The above device hath, on several occasions, been painted in gold, on a field: from which circumstance, many persons have supposed that to be the arms of the Admiralty Office.

AILESBUURY, Borough, [Bucks.] hath not either armorial ensign or seal.

ALBAN HALL, [Oxford] This society, not being either endowed or incorporated, has never assumed nor obtained any grant of arms.

ALDBOROUGH, Borough, [Suff. Seal granted to the Corporation, 20 Oct. 1561] a ship of three masts, in full sail, on the waves of the sea; the main-sail charged with a lion of St. George; on the round top of each mast, are four spears, with their barbed points upwards.

Motto, Opiferyque per orbem dicor.
- Note.*—"Supplanting a serpent," are the words of the grant; but it is likewise blazoned, "beastriding a serpent."
- APPLEBY, [Borough, Westm.] az. three lions pass. guard. in pale, or, crowned with ducal coronets of the last.
- Note.*—These arms are engraven on the corporation seal; round which is the legend, Sigillum communitatis Burgii de Appibi. On the reverse, is the figure of St. Laurence, laid on a gridiron, placed over a fire, and at each end thereof, are figures not to be perfectly defined; above them, near to the dexter side, is a banner of the arms of the borough, and below them three estoiles; and near to the sinister, is an angel, holding a cope to receive the soul of the saint. Round the reverse, is this legend, Hic jacet Laurentius in craticula positus. This identical seal was given to the burghers of Appleby, by King John, whose original charter is still preserved in the town chest. The parochial church is dedicated to St. Laurence; and a fair is annually kept within the borough, on St. Laurence's day. A tradition prevails in the borough, that the lions in the arms were crowned with ducal coronets in memory of some signal service performed by the burghers against the Scots.
- ARGYLE, See, [Scotland] az. two crosiers, endorsed, in saltier, or; in chief, a mitre of the last.
- ARMAGH, Archbishop of, and Primate of all Ireland, az. an episcopal staff, in pale, ar. ensigned with a cross pattée or, surmounted by a pall of the second, edged and fringed of the third, charged with four crosses formée fitchée sa.
- Note.*—The Archbishop of Armagh being invariably prelate of the order of St. Patrick, bears the arms of the see (impaling his own paternal coat) encircled by the ribbon of that order, and the badge pendant beneath.
- ARMOURERS AND BRAZIER'S COMPANY, [London] The armourers were incorporated in the reign of Henry VI. and had for their arms, ar. on a chev. sa. a gauntlet of the first, betw. two pairs of swords, in saltier, of the last, hilt and pommels or; on a chief of the second, an oval shield of the field, charged with a cross gu. encircled with a carved shield of the third; betw. two peers' helmets ppr. garnished gold. Motto, Make all sure.

The arms granted to the Braziers, at the time of their incorporation, are, az. on a chev. or, betw. two ewers, (i. e. beakers) in chief, and a three-legged pot, with two handles, in base, of the second, three roses gu. seeded gold, barbed vert. But ever since the union of the Braziers with the Armourers, the United Company hath for its armorial ensign, on the dexter side of the escutcheon, the arms of the Armourers, impaling, on the sinister, those of the Braziers.—Crest, a demi man, in armour, coupé at the middle of the thighs, all ppr. garnished or; the beaver up; on his head a plume of three feathers, two ar. and one gu.; round his waist, a sash of the last, fringed of the second; holding in his dexter hand a sword, erect, of the first, hilt and pommel gold. Supporters, two men ppr. in complete armour; the dexter of the first, garnished or: the sinister, all of the last; on their heads, plumes of feathers; round their waists, a sash; and each holding in the exterior hand a sword, as the crest. Motto, We are one.

Note.—The ewers in chief in the Braziers' arms have each one handle, which is turned to the sides of the escutcheon.

FUNERALS.

AMONGST the numerous and diversified peculiarities by which the human mind is characterised, it is scarcely possible to find one more predominant and universal, or that can be traced to a more amiable origin, than that of a solicitude to testify our veneration and regard for those of our deceased relatives or contemporaries, whose virtues or abilities had rendered them illustrious in life, by splendid and imposing funeral solemnities. This sentiment of respect for departed worth, appears to be as extensive as human nature itself, and coeval with the primordial existence of the species; pervading mankind in every region of the habitable globe, in all the nameless varieties and gradations of barbarism and refinement, and under every modification of government. That a feeling of this description, at once powerful and prevalent, should be variously exerted and displayed, can excite no astonishment in the minds of those who are tolerably conversant with the phenomena of human nature; since passions essentially the same are known to be capable of almost endless inflection. Hence the number, sumptuousness, and variety of funeral solemnities amongst our progenitors, which emanated from this sentiment. The rites, ceremonies, and solemnizations, peculiar to the interment of the dead, in ancient times, seem to have originated in a conviction or persuasion of the survivors, that the feelings, passions, and habits, of those who had crossed the "bourne from whence no traveller returns," bore an obvious and striking analogy to the mortal scene from which they had been removed by the interposition of death, with this difference, that their new existence would be susceptible of a higher degree of enjoyment, and accompanied with an inconceivable and ineffable accession to their felicity. And what renders this hypothesis of their origin more probable, is, that those things which were identified with the predilections, habits, and pleasurable pursuits of the deceased, while living, or which he was known to have regarded with satisfaction and complacency, usually constituted an essential and conspicuous part of such ceremonials and processions, and were not unfrequently deposited with him in the tomb.

The superior degree of moral illumination, resulting from the establishment of Christianity in the principal countries of Europe, was found to be incompatible with the continuance of many of the sepulchral ceremonies, which had originated during the darkness and superstition of mythological theology, and consequently their abolition was regarded as indispensable. For, notwithstanding they had obtained great popularity, had been consecrated, and rendered venerable by their antiquity, if they be considered in relation to those perceptions of the dignity of human nature, deducible from the lofty speculations of philosophy, or the still more sublime and infinitely more ennobling and consolatory truths, which have been promulgated to mortals through the medium of revelation, relative to their immortal destination, they must be regarded as not only trivial and insignificant, but absolutely irrational and preposterous. Such parts of them, however, as were symbolical of the rank, merit, or honourable descent of the deceased, and were not absolutely hostile to the laws and precepts of Christianity, were retained.

The enterprising spirit and military genius of our northern ancestors, rendered personal intrepidity and heroism, in their estimation, the most meritorious of all qualities. This inordinate, but absurd predilection for martial glory and reputation was greatly augmented and enhanced by the extraordinary success of their arms, and the numerous settlements which they acquired by their bravery. Nor is it by any means improbable that the monotonous existence of these times of almost patriarchal simplicity, and the obvious paucity of its distinctions, tended greatly to give heraldic pomp and magnificence a preponderating and undue importance. Hence it flowed, that the instruments and habiliments of war, standards, banners, armorial bearings, &c. when publicly exhibited, were considered by them as the most unequivocal presentations of merited distinction; and consequently formed a prominent part in their funeral processions; and, to perpetuate the glory of the deceased, were usually deposited in the church contiguous to his remains.

And here it may not be improper to observe, that there is no truism in the whole range of human knowledge better authenticated, or more generally admitted, by the well-informed and experienced portion of mankind, than that barbarism and love of ostentation and parade are uniformly associated. The accuracy of this position will be amply corroborated by an appeal to the gorgeousness and splendour so peculiar to oriental despotisms, or to the carnivals and other imposing religious processions, which so frequently occur in Rome, and other parts of the papal dominions. Admitting it, then, as an indubitable fact, that this peculiarity of character is more prominently developed where knowledge and refinement have but partially exerted their benign and ameliorating influence, it must unavoidably follow, that this intellectual feature would be in very extensive operation, at the period of which we are now treating; for the feudal system was then in the zenith of its power—a system by no means favourable to the extension of knowledge. The intestine commotions which must necessarily have resulted from the rivalry, ambition, and jealousy of contiguous chieftains, afforded but little opportunity for moral or intellectual cultivation; and the then precarious and unsettled condition of society, would naturally induce a state of mind inimical to the ennobling, but sedentary and unobtrusive pursuits of literature and science, which can only be successfully prosecuted in tranquillity and repose. It is also highly probable, that those petty kings or chieftains would consider external pomp, ceremony, and etiquette, as in some degree essential to the maintenance of that unlimited power, which they so arbitrarily and despotically exercised over their followers; since meretricious ornament is found to operate with resistless fascination on the minds of a weak, indiscriminating, and illiterate multitude.

In a state of society, then, when the public mind was so constituted and organized, that a love of magnificence and eclat formed its dominant and elementary feature, nothing could be more natural, than that the devices of heraldry should have been singularly attractive to the nobility, and have presented strong and peculiar claims to their attention and regard; being at once so obviously identified with ancestral glory, the pageantry of state, and the "pomp and circumstance of war." Accordingly we find, that those families which were more particularly distinguished for their dignity, affluence, and power, in those parts of Europe, where the feudal system had been established, assumed various signs or marks indicative of honourable descent, family antiquity, illustrious matrimonial alliances, and the valourous achievements of their progenitors, to prevent the possibility of their being confounded with the lower orders of the people. These signs, the appropriate arrangement and classification of which were eventually raised to the dignity of a science, were also adopted in war, being usually painted or embroidered on their military costumes, that their followers or subordinates might be enabled to recognise them with greater facility and precision, as their natural and legitimate leaders, when congregated with the national force, of which, conformably with the feudal tenure, their martial retinue and dependants constituted a component part.

In the process of time, however, the hereditary distinctions peculiar to noble birth and extraordinary merit began to be adopted by families and individuals of comparative insignificance and obscurity, without the slightest regard to discrimination or propriety; and this observation applies more particularly to such of them as related to the solemnization of interments. Nay, this ambitious usurpation became at length so prevalent, as to threaten the total annihilation of all the external marks of distinction which had hitherto been appealed to, as the insignia of noble descent and meritorious achievement. Such a spirit of rivalry could not but be viewed by the great with obvious jealousy and dissatisfaction; and amongst the lower orders it was found to be productive of perpetual confusion and disturbance, and ultimately led to numerous and palpable absurdities. Nor did this growing disposition of the inferior classes to appropriate the honours of the great, appear to have been any where more predominant than in England, where pecuniary resources were more generally and extensively possessed, than by most other nations in Europe. In this state of things, the funerals of the lower orders were solemnized with the honours expressly and specifically intended for the gentlemen; the gentlemen's, with those of the knights; and the knights', with those of the nobility!

The noble and illustrious, who deemed themselves aggrieved by this unceremonious and indiscriminate adoption of their honours, in order to affect the demolition, or at least to diminish the prevalence of so ridiculous a mania amongst the inferior gentry and commonalty, at length employed the kings and heralds of arms—a body of men by whom the complex science of armory was professionally studied and cultivated—to superintend and arrange their funeral solemnities. It came within the province of those functionaries, when their services were thus called into requisition, to dictate and prescribe the escutcheons, ensigns, banners, and armorial bearings proper to be borne processionally with the corpse to the place of interment, as appropriate to, and representative of, the rank and merit of the deceased. The number, quality, and character of the attendants, as well as the determination and adjustment of the various punctilios of precedence, relative to the order of the procession, incidentally arising from consanguinity, relationship, connexion, and dependency, were also committed to their charge, and subjected to their control.

The custom of thus constantly referring the regulation and superintendence of funeral obsequies, on the part of the nobility, to the kings and heralds of arms, that they might be managed with greater accuracy and decorum, soon rendered it a lucrative and honourable profession; the immunities and privileges of which, that body were anxious to monopolize and perpetuate. It was hardly to be expected, however, that the emoluments of a custom merely founded on the courtesy and spontaneous suffrages of the great, and totally unsupported by any legal or exclusive tenure, could be retained for any length of time without creating a spirit of competition amongst those who had the vanity to think themselves capable of managing the numerous and complicated ceremonials pertaining to funeral solemnizations, with a judgement and precision equal to that of the kings and heralds of arms. Conformably to this view, we learn that a body of men, calling themselves undertakers, in conjunction with and aided by a class of artizans denominated painters and paper-stainers, did not scruple to invade the prerogatives which the heralds of arms had so arrogantly assumed to be theirs imprescriptibly; by which the business and profits, as well as the high estimation in which the former were held, became in a short time materially diminished. The circumstance of this supposed invasion of their privileges, gave great umbrage to the kings and heralds of arms; and at length, in the reign of Elizabeth, when sepulchral pageantry had reached the acme of its extravagance, became the subject of a long and tedious dispute. To give the substance of this memorable struggle, would be as uninteresting to the reader, as it is irrelative to the object of the present undertaking. Suffice it to say, that during this and several of the subsequent reigns, the encroachment of these illiterate competitors was vigorously and indignantly repelled by the heralds of arms; and the exclusive right of the latter to the entire management of funeral solemnities and processions, advocated with singular acuteness and ability, and with a zeal and perseverance but rarely exemplified in any cause. Argument, appeal, remonstrance, and intimidation were successively, but in vain, employed to support the dignity and secure the emoluments of their profession. Nor did the exertions of the heralds end here. After these various means had been unavailingly resorted to, for the maintenance and preservation of their declining authority, repeated applications were made to government for parliamentary protection. The legislature, however, was so far from countenancing the pretensions of the heralds, that their petitions for redress were invariably but respectfully negatived. For such was the jealous state of the public mind during the unsettled periods of this protracted contest, that any special enactment in their favour would have been deemed an infringement upon popular liberty; and the then expanding political energies of a great and powerful nation, would have rendered such a proceeding in no ordinary degree hazardous and impolitic. The last great effort of the college of arms to recover, by an act of the legislature, their ancient immunities and power, took place in 1737; when, being formally negatived by that assembly, the struggle was relinquished, and all further hope of parliamentary redress abandoned as chimerical; since which period, the undertakers have enjoyed an unmolested participation in this honourable, and once lucrative profession.

From the period when the right of the officers at arms to the sole business and management of interments, with all the diversified ceremonials connected therewith, became the subject of controversy, and the distinctive honours of armory could with impunity be misappropriated by ignorant and mercenary innovators, may be dated the decline of that immoderate predilection for "The boast of heraldry and pomp of power," which had so long characterized the English aristocracy.

Without some prescriptive measure, to obtain which the heralds had so strenuously and perseveringly exerted themselves, it was impossible to circumscribe these hereditary and conventional honours to the nobility alone; and it was the exclusiveness of such expensive distinctions and exhibitions that alone rendered them valuable in the estimation of the nobility. The universal adoption of the former, and the frequent celebration of the latter, therefore, amongst all ranks and classes of society, eventually sunk them into comparative disrepute. The moment they ceased to be characteristic of rank and affluence, and were no longer representative of glorious enterprise and valourous achievement, the object of their original institution was obviously defeated; and it is alien to the nature of man to suppose, that they could, under such circumstances, continue to be sanctioned and upheld by a powerful but indignant aristocracy.

Nor can the enormous expense inseparable from the solemnization of funeral ceremonies, conformably to the authorized and prescribed formalities of heraldry, be with propriety overlooked in the present brief inquiry into the origin, prevalence, and eventual decay of this branch of the science. There is no rank to be found in society, however dignified or affluent, on whom pecuniary considerations do not exercise a greater or less influence in their intercourse with the world. A just and accurate appreciation of the value of money extends alike to our business, our honours, and our pleasures. Wherever the mind, therefore, in the gratification of its predilections, discovers an evident disproportion between their real intrinsic worth, and the expense incurred by their enjoyment, a powerful motive will be suggested for their discontinuance; since nothing can be more heterogene or repellent to our feelings than the idea of imposition or extortion. This remark will be found applicable to the subject under consideration; for the heralds at arms, like all bodies who enjoy an exclusive and undivided monopoly, were continually striving to render their profession more lucrative, which ultimately led to the almost entire abandonment of funeral rights. This was to be expected in the natural order of things. If the exorbitant charges of the heralds for superintending funeral ceremonies, be taken into consideration, then, and the variety, quantity, and costliness, of the materials necessary to give them splendour and effect, such as superb velvet hangings, cushions, stoles, carpets, fringes, escutcheons, &c. all of which, at the conclusion of the solemnity, became their sole property, it will not, we think, appear surprising, that the processional splendours of heraldic interment should, in the course of time, be superseded by the unostentatious manner of performing the last offices of humanity, which at present prevails. To these may be added the fees and droits claimed by those officers under various denominations and pretences; the expense incurred by the purchase of black suits for the presiding heralds and such of their servants as attended the procession; the rich trappings for their horses; and when the corpse had to be conveyed to any considerable distance, the heavy demands of transportation money. That the above exactions terminated in this result, is rendered indisputable by the fact, that, towards the close of the sixteenth century, many of the nobility and gentry, the classes with whom these august ceremonies originated, and by whom they had been so long and pertinaciously upheld, expressly enjoined in their last wills and testaments, that the observance of the etiquette of armory was to be dispensed with in their funerals, as the honour derived from such pompous and magnificent rites, was more than counterbalanced by the extravagant charges of the heralds.

In corroboration of the foregoing observations, relative to the exorbitancy of the heralds at arms for their official services at public funerals, we will give a few transcripts from original papers selected out of a multiplicity of authentic proofs, where these ancient and established usages of the science were punctually observed, with the expenses attending the same, which, to the intelligent reader, we presume, will be found both curious and amusing.

A Letter from Elizabeth Russel, to Sir William Dethick, Garter Principal King of Arms.

"Good Mr. Garter, I pray you, as your leisure doth best serve you, set down advisedly and exactly, in every particular itself, the number of mourners due to my calling, being a viscountess of birth, with their charge of blacks, and the number of waiting-women for myself, and the women-mourners, which, with the chief mourner, and her that shall bear the trayue, will be in number ten, beside waiting-women, pages, and gentlemen-huishars; Then I pray you what number of chief mourners, of lords, knights, and gentlemen, necessary, with their charge, and how many servants for them, beside my preacher, physitian, lawyers; and XL cloaks for my own men; then 63 women widows, the charges of the hearse, heralds, and church. Good Mr. Garter, do it exactly; for I find forewarnings that bid me provide a pick-axe, &c. so, with my most friendly commendations to you, I rest

Your old Mistress, and Friend,

Edward, Earl of Derby, died on the 24th of October, 1572, and was buried on the 4th of December following.

"First, after his departure, the body was well seared, wrapt in lead, and chested. Then the chapel, the house with the two courts, were hanged with black cloth and garnished escutcheons of his arms. And on Saturday, before the funeral, the body was brought into the chapel, where it was covered with a pall of black velvet, garnished with escutcheons of arms, and thereon was set his coat of arms, helmet and crest, sword and target, and about him was placed the standard, great banner, and six bannerols.

"And on Thursday in the morning, before the sermon, the Earl of Derby, his son, being present, with a great number of esquires and gentlemen, and the three chief officers of his house, viz. steward, treasurer, and comptroller, standing about the body with white staves in their hands, Clarencieux king of arms, with his rich coat on his back, published this thanksgiving and style of the deceased in form following:—

"All honour, laud, and praise to Almighty God, who, through his divine mercy, hath taken out of this transitory life, to his eternal joy and bliss, the Right Honourable Edward, Earl of Derby, Lord Stanley, Strange, and of Man, one of the Lords of her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, and Knight Companion of the most noble Order of the Garter."

"At Ormskirk, in Lancashire, two miles from Latham, was a stately hearse, erected of five principals, thirty feet in height, twelve in length, and nine in breadth, double railed, all garnished in this order and manner following; first, the top part and rails covered with black cloth, the vallance and principals covered with velvet, to the vallance a fringe of silk; the majesty, being of taffeta lined with buckram, had thereon, most curiously wrought in gold and silver, the achievements of his arms, with helm, crest, supporters, and motto, and four other buckram escutcheons in metal; the top garnished with escutcheons and pencils in metal, six great burial paste escutcheons at the four corners, and at the uppermost top the vallance set forth with small escutcheons of his arms on buckram, in metal, within the garter, the rails and posts also garnished with escutcheons wrought in gold and silver, on paper royal. The which hearse was placed between the choir and the body of the church, which church was also hanged throughout with black cloth, escutcheons also being set thereon, not only of his own arms within the garter, but also impaled with the three countesses', his wives. And this being finished by Wednesday at night, before the burial, the order of proceeding on Thursday, being the day appointed, was in manner following:—

"First, two yeoman conductors, with black staves in their hands, to lead the way.

"Then all poor men in gowns, two and two together, to the number of a hundred.

"The choir and singing men, to the number of forty, in their surplices.

"An esquire bearing the standard, with his hood on his head, and his horse trapped to the ground, garnished with a shaffron of his arms, within the garter, on his forehead, and four escutcheons of buckram in metal, on each side two.

"The deceased's gentlemen, mounted on comely geldings, in their gowns, with hoods on their shoulders, two and two, to the number of eighty.

"The two secretaries of the deceased, riding together, as the other gentlemen afore.

"The esquires and knights in like order, two and two, to the number of fifty.

"The deceased's two chaplains, with hoods on their shoulders, according to their degrees.

"The preacher, his horse trapped, and a doctor's hood on his shoulder.

"The deceased's three chief officers of his household, the steward, treasurer, and comptroller, with white staves in their hands, and hoods on their shoulders, and their horses trapped.

"An esquire bearing the great banner of his arms, his hood on his head, his horse also trapped, and garnished with escutcheons, as is before specified.

"A herald of arms, (Lancaster) with his hood on his head, his horse trapped as aforesaid, wearing the deceased's coat of arms of damask, did bear his helm of steel, pencil gilt, with mantles of black velvet, the knots gilt, and on a wreath or torse of his colours stood his crest, curiously carved, painted, and wrought in gold and silver.

"A king of arms, (Norroy) with his hood on his head, wearing his coat of arms richly embroidered with the arms of England, his horse trapped and garnished as aforesaid, bearing the shield of arms of the deceased within a garter, and thereon a coronet.

"Another king of arms, (Clarencieux) riding in like order, bearing the deceased's sword, with the pommel upward, the hilt and chape gilt, with a scabbard of velvet.

"Another king of arms, (Garter) riding in like order, bearing another of the deceased's coat of arms, being wrought as the other was; and on the left side of him rode a gentleman-usher, with a white rod in his hand, his horse trapped, and his hood on his head.

"The chariot, wherein the body lay, was covered with black velvet, garnished with escutcheons, drawn by four horses, trapped with black, and on each horse was placed four escutcheons and a shaffron of his arms, and also on each horse sat a page in a black coat, and a hood on his head; on the fore seat of the chariot sat a gentleman-usher in his gown, and his hood on his head, and a white rod in his hand.

"About the body, it being in the said chariot, rode four esquires, being assistants to the body, their hoods on their heads, and their horses trapped down to the ground.

"On the outside of them, about the said chariot, rode six other esquires, their hoods on their heads, their horses trapped, each of them bearing a bannerol, not only of the deceased's arms, but also the arms of such noble houses whereof he was descended, viz. the arms of Thomas, first Earl of Derby of that name, Lord Stanley and of Man, impaled with the arms of Eleanor his wife, daughter of Richard Nevil, Earl of Salisbury, and sister of Richard Nevil, Earl of Warwick and Salisbury. The second bannerol was of George, Lord Stanley and Strange, the son and heir of the said Thomas, impaled with the arms of Jane his wife, daughter and heir of John, Lord Strange of Knockin. The third bannerol was the arms of Thomas, the second Earl of Derby of that name, Lord Stanley, Strange, and of Man, impaling with the arms of Anne his wife, daughter of Edward, Lord Hastings, and sister to George, Lord Hastings, the first Earl of Huntingdon of that name. The fourth bannerol was the arms of the deceased, impaled with the arms of Dorothy, his first wife, daughter of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, Earl of Surrey, and Earl-Marshal of England, Lord Mowbray, Segrave and Bruce. On the fifth bannerol, was also the deceased's arms, impaled with the arms of Margaret, his second wife, daughter of Ellis Barlow, Esq. On the sixth bannerol was impaled, with the arms of the deceased, the arms of Mary, his third wife, daughter of Sir George Cotton, Knt. Vice Chamberlain to King Edward VI.

"Next after the chariot proceeded the chief mourner, in the mourning robes of an earl; and on each side of him rode a gentleman-usher, with white rods in their hands, their hoods on their heads, and their horses trapped.

"On the left side of him, and somewhat behind, rode the gentleman of the horse of the deceased, his hood on his head, his horse trapped, and leading in his hand the horse of estate, all covered and trapped with black velvet.

"Next after, rode eight other mourners, being assistants to the chief mourner, their hoods on their shoulders and heads, and their horses trapped with fine cloth to the ground.

"A yeoman, bareheaded, in a black coat, on foot.

"Two sons of the principal mourners, in gowns, and hoods on their shoulders, either of them having a gentleman to lead their horses.

"Two yeomen-ushers with white rods, on foot.

"The deceased's yeomen, two and two together, to the number of five hundred.

"All gentlemen's servants, two and two together.

"And thus being whiffled all the way by certain yeomen, in black coats, on foot, with black staves in their hands, proceeded to the church door, where their servants attended to receive their horses; then, being dismounted, all the gentlemen that proceeded before the corse, entered into the church, and received their places according to their degrees, leaving the hundred poor men without the church, on each side of the way.

"Then the body was taken out of the chariot by eight gentlemen in gowns, with hoods on their heads, and assisted by four yeomen in black coats, and borne into the hearse, where it was orderly placed upon a table three feet high, covered with black cloth; and upon him was laid, not only a pall of black velvet, but also his coat of arms, sword, target, helm, and crest.

"And thus the body being placed, the principal mourner entered the hearse, where was prepared for him, at the head of the deceased, a stool with a carpet, and four cushions of black velvet, to kneel and lean upon.

"Then entered the other eight mourners, and took their places within the uttermost part of the hearse, on each side of the body, each of them having a cushion of black velvet to lean upon, and their stools covered with black cloth, and a cushion of the same to kneel upon. At the feet of the deceased, without the rail, stood the two esquires, holding the standard and great banner; and on each side of the hearse stood the other esquires, with the bannerols; and behind the principal mourner, stood three kings of arms, and the four gentlemen-ushers; and between the standard, and at the great banner, stood Lancaster herald of arms, wearing the deceased's coat of arms.

"And thus the body being placed, and every other estate according to their degrees, Norroy king of arms pronounced the style of the deceased, as is before mentioned; which ended, the Dean of Chester began his sermon; and after the sermon, the vicar began the commemoration; and after the epistle and gospel, the offering was commenced, in the manner following:—

"First, Henry, Earl of Derby, being principal mourner, did offer for the deceased a piece of gold, having before him, Garter, Clarencieux, and Norroy, kings of arms, and Lancaster herald of arms; and on each side of Garter, a gentleman-usher and an esquire, to bear the chief mourner's train; and after him did proceed the other eight mourners, two and two, according to their degrees. And in like order, he with the other mourners repaired to their places; where he, remaining a small time, went to offer for himself, having Clarencieux and Lancaster only before him; and thus having offered, stayed between the vicar and Lancaster herald of arms, to receive the noble achievements of his father, offered up by the other eight mourners, in manner and form following:—

"First, Lord Stourton and Sir Rowland Stanley offered up the coat of arms, having before them Clarencieux king of arms.

"Secondly, Sir Peter Leigh, Knt. and Thomas Butler, Esq. offered the sword, bearing the pommel forward, having before them Norroy king of arms.

"Thirdly, John Ratcliffe and Alexander Barlow, Esquires, offered the target of his arms, and before them went Clarencieux.

"Fourthly, Alexander Rigby and William Stopforth, Esqrs. offered the helm and crest, having before them Norroy king of arms.

"Which ended, the principal mourner repaired to his place, and on each side of him a gentleman-usher, and his train borne up by an esquire; and before him Clarencieux king of arms, where he remained till the offering was ended.

"Then offered the other eight mourners for themselves, viz.—

"The first pair, having before them Clarencieux king of arms.

"The second pair, and before them Norroy king of arms.

"The third pair, having before them Bluemantle pursuivant of arms.

"The fourth pair, having before them Bluemantle.

"Thus when the principal mourner and eight mourners assistants had offered, and were placed again as aforesaid:

"Then offered the four esquires, assistants to the deceased, having before them Lancaster herald of arms.

"Then the standard, offered by the esquire that bare it, and before him Bluemantle.

"Then the great banner, offered by the esquire that bare it, and before him Bluemantle.

"Which standard and banner being offered by them that bare them, as aforesaid, they did put off their hoods, and took their places among the rest of the mourners, being gentlemen.

"Then offered the steward, treasurer, and comptroller, with their white staves in their hands, and Lancaster herald of arms before them.

"Then offered all the other knights, esquires, and gentlemen, wearing black, proceeding in order, two and two, according to their degrees.

"Then offered the yeomen-ushers, and after them the deceased's yeomen, two and two.

"When the offering was thus ended, the one hundred poor men were placed to proceed homeward on foot; and after them the knights, esquires, and gentlemen, on horse-back; then Garter principal king of arms; then the principal mourner, with the other eight mourners, two and two; and then the yeomen of foot, two and two.

"After whose departure, presently the body was, by the eight gentlemen and four yeomen aforesaid, carried to the grave, and before it Clarenceux and Norroy kings of arms, and Lancaster herald of arms; and about the body, the four assistants and the six esquires, bearing the bannerols; and after the body, were the steward, treasurer, and controller, with two gentlemen-ushers, and two yeomen-ushers, who, when the body was buried, kneeling on their knees, with weeping tears, brake their white staves and rods over their heads, and threw the shivers of the same into the grave; that done, the six esquires delivered up the six bannerols, which were presently, with the rest of the achievements, orderly placed over and about him; and so the said officers departed to Latham-Hall, where they received their offices and staves again of the new Earl, their lord and master.

Funeral Procession of His late Majesty, King George the Fourth.

On Thursday, July 19th, 1830, precisely at half-past eight o'clock P. M. the procession commenced its movement. From the van of the procession quitting the Castle, to the rear of it entering the chapel, the time occupied was one hour and five minutes. The noise and confusion that prevailed among the multitude assembled in the Lower Castle yard, ceased as soon as the sound of the distant trumpet and muffled drum reached them. Decorum and a becoming feeling were then manifested by the throng, and many persons took off their hats. A little difficulty was occasionally experienced in moving the car, especially where the platform took a new direction. As the car was passing the Deanery, the Peers who supported the canopy were forced close to the platform. To those who had the advantage of being near the procession, the sight was particularly imposing; but, by the multitude, a very imperfect view was obtained. The Duke of Wellington bore the Sword of State, and on his left was a Nobleman bearing the Cap of Maintenance. His Majesty and Prince George of Cumberland followed. The Duke of Sussex and the Duke of Cumberland walked together. Flambeaux were distributed amongst the soldiery, which threw a gloomy splendour over the mournful scene.

After the procession had been moving about twenty minutes, during which time the late King's private band of musicians played the "Dead March of Saul," and other solemn music, with the most admirable effect, a rocket was discharged, for the purpose, as we understood, of conveying intelligence to the Artillery stationed in the Long Walk, that the royal coffin was in motion.

The procession moved in the following order:

We cannot conclude this part of our undertaking without presenting our readers with the following ingenious and appropriate Eulogium on Heraldry, extracted from the "Londonensis," a work of distinguished merit, which, in the course of the present arduous compilation, we have sometimes advantageously consulted.

"Heraldry, as clearly appears by the foregoing pages, is the constant and faithful companion of man through the different periods of his life. At his birth, she ushers him into the world by the real and appropriate title he ought to bear; in his youth, she amuses and instructs his mind by the display of her scientific rules and significant enluminures; when of age, she teaches him how to erect and decorate his family-mansion, what shields of arms should swell in bold relief over the portals of his castle, or adorn in historical array the frieze and cornices of his halls. Her classical pencil transfers the splendid honours of her pallet to the pannels of his carriage; enlivens with her seven-fold tinctures the liveries of his attendants, and embroiders his mantle with hereditary armories, which characterise and honourably distinguish him through public and private life. Heraldry has directed him in what rank to seek for his lovely consort, the fair partner of every social enjoyment: the pedigree of his ancestors is again unfolded to his view; and heraldry, with unerring hand, points out the names which courtesy or family distinctions have selected for his children. If the sound of the trumpet call him from these domestic comforts, to nobler employments in defence of his country, the genius of heraldry stands by his side, holding as a mirror his trusty buckler, which she has so curiously wrought with the achievements of his ancestors, that we may say of him, as Virgil does of his hero, in a different view, "Avorum attollens humero famamque et fata suorum." So also, when his earthly career is run, and the tomb of his ancestors opens its storied valves, to receive the remains of one whose life was gloriously spent in the service of his country; who so highly merited the affection of his relations, and the regard of his friends; heraldry is still at hand, endeavouring to console the mourners for the loss they have sustained, by amusing the eye with armorial pageantry, calculated to animate and raise the drooping heart from grief. The family banners that proudly float around the hearse, or that wave in solemn procession through the streets, amid the admiring crowd; the sable vehicle, and the family escutcheons, the trappings of the horses, and the numerous shields which ornament the gothic pile where the body is to be deposited; in one word, the whole of the pomp is marshalled by the hands of heraldry, who, to defeat as much as possible the combined efforts of time and of death, officially consigns his name to her sacred records, as the last tribute she can pay to the memory of her friend."
